> If the President himself was the officer of the people, elected by them and responsible to them, there would be less danger from this concentration of all power in his hands; but it is the business of statesmen to act upon things as they are, and not as they would wish them to be. We must look forward to the time when the public revenue will be doubled; when the civil and military officers of the Government will be quadrupled; when its influence over individuals will be multiplied to an indefinite extent; when the nomination of the President can carry any man through the Senate, and his recommendation can carry any measure through the two Houses of Congress; when the principle of public action will be open and avowed—the President wants my vote, and I want his patronage; I will vote as he wishes, and he will give me the office I wish for. What will this be but the government of one man? And what is the government of one man but a monarchy? Names are nothing. The nature of a thing is in its substance, and the name soon accommodates itself to the substance.

Now, Senators may think that this has nothing to do with the question I am discussing; and yet those learned Senators thought that it had much to do with the discussion of the exact question which was then before the Senate—the right of the Senate to demand—not to ask, but to demand—and receive from the head of a department all information of every kind, documentary or otherwise.

Mr. President, the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has handed to me certain precedents. With the permission of the Senate I will include them in my remarks. They are precedents cited by this same committee in their report. I say that in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] when I first began.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CLAPP. It does seem to me, with all due deference to the Senator, that that is the important matter. If we have precedents that are to form a part of this argument, I for one—and I believe many other Senators—will be very glad indeed to have the time taken for the presentation of that phase of the argument.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator that throughout this debate, extracts from which I will include in the RECORD, there is a particular inclusion of all matters of information, everything which relates to the acts of the departments as contended for by those Senators.

Mr. CULBERSON. I will say to the Senator that the precedents are on page 7.

Mr. BACON. I will read two of them now——

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. This is a matter of such vital importance to the Senate, collectively and individually, that I feel that the Senator would be warranted in taking—and I am sure I should be very glad indeed to have him take—the time in the morning to read the precedents and further discuss this question, so that, once for all, if it is possible, we may come to some clear understanding or conviction as to what are our powers and rights, and, if possible, set about obtaining them.

I hope the Senator will not be hurried to the conclusion of his speech and gloss things over, though he never intentionally glosses over anything; but he would necessarily be obliged to neglect to give us the meat and the essence of this argument if he should now conclude his speech and simply incorporate this, that, and the other precedent. Therefore he had better take the time to do so now. There is nothing so important, in my judgment, as the present situation between the Executive and the Senate, and I hope the Senator will either go on now and give us the full benefit of what he is going to say, or that he will take the time to do so to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, much that I have said many Senators have not heard. Unfortunately for me, the Senator from South Carolina has not been in the Chamber during all of my argument, and, therefore, he has not heard it all.

Mr. TILLMAN. Many Senators have not been in the Chamber.

Mr. BACON. That is the reason they have not heard it. I do not complain of it at all. I am simply saying that in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] and also that of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. There is much that I have gone over that does relate to the matters which are now suggested.

I think that this is a matter of such extreme importance that it ought to go to the Judiciary Committee. That would be much better than for me to continue to read to the Senate the opinions of others or to state opinions of my own, and I think that under the challenge made by the President of the United States it ought to go to the Judiciary Committee, and that the committee should report to the Senate what are our own rights in the matter—whether we are limited to requests or whether we are empowered to command.

Now, as to my continuing, in order to cover the ground the Senator suggests I should have to repeat very much of what I have already said.

Mr. TILLMAN. No. I have only suggested that the Senator read the precedents and comment upon them at such length as he deems proper.

Mr. BACON. I can not go over the same ground again. I have practically gone over it, not citing the entire matter I intend to incorporate because it would take too long, and it is not necessary to go over it again. And as to the suggestion of the Senator with respect to its importance and that it should be settled by the Senate in an authoritative way, the only way is that the law committee of the body shall take it up and state what the powers of the Senate are in the matter. If I am wrong, I am perfectly content to abide by the judgment of the Judiciary Committee; and if I am right, I shall be more than gratified to be fortified by the views of that committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from North Dakota will pardon me, I want to read what the Senator from Texas handed me, and then I will be through.

Mr. McCUMBER. I simply desire to ask the Senator, before he closes, a question concerning the construction of the language used by the President, because I wish to have his opinion upon it. What I wish to ask the Senator is whether or not, in his opinion, the last four lines in this paragraph, which say:

> Heads of executive departments are subject to the Constitution and to the laws passed by the Congress in pursuance of the Constitution and to the directions of the President of the United States, but to no other direction whatever—should not be considered as limited by the preceding declaration, in which the President states:

> I feel bound, however, to add that I have instructed the Attorney-General not to respond to that portion of the resolution which calls for a statement of his reasons for nonaction.

Should we not consider that the statements made by the President—all of them—refer to that portion which calls for his reasons for nonaction and not that portion which demands papers or demands information? It seems to me that that is the only construction which can be placed upon it, although I admit that the words in closing are very broad and general. But I want the Senator's opinion on that proposition.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, really the principal thing asked of the Attorney-General was his reason, because the fact was well known, although the form may have been whether he had or had not instituted proceedings, that he had not, and it was the matter of reasons which was inquired into. If the President stopped with that sentence it would have conveyed the entire idea that he would wish to convey if the Senator's suggestion is correct that he was simply denying the right of the Senate to demand reasons. But when he goes further he not only includes his denial of the right of the Senate to demand reasons, but he denies the right of the Senate to make any demand whatever, because he uses language incapable of mistake. If he had used language which might be susceptible of the construction that he was referring to that, we might take that as the intention of the President. But he goes on to specify what powers have the right. Does the Senator understand that the President meant to say that the Constitution——

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me until I get through.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator mean to say that he understands the President in what he says to say that the Constitution has the right to demand reasons, but the Senate has not the right to demand reasons, but could demand facts; that the Congress has the right to demand reasons, but the Senate has not the right to demand reasons, but could demand facts; that the President has the right to demand reasons, but the Senate has not the right to demand reasons, but could demand facts? That while the Senate can not demand reasons, it may demand information? No. In the last sentence he had not reasons alone in contemplation. He is speaking of the power to direct in any particular, and he not only denies the power of the Senate to direct in any particular, but specifically enumerates the powers which have the authority to direct, to wit, the Constitution of the United States, the Congress of the United States, and the President of the United States.

I will not stop to comment on the fact that the Constitution does not lay any commands on the heads of departments, because they are not known to the Constitution.

The Senator from Texas has called my attention to these precedents, and there are others, which I will read in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota. This is set out in this report:

On the 6th December, 1866, when there was much irritation existing between the Houses of Congress and the Executive, the House of Representatives adopted a resolution directing the Postmaster-General to communicate to the House information of all the postmasters removed from office between the 28th July, 1866, and said 6th of December, together with the reasons or causes of such removals, and the names of all persons appointed in their places, etc. This command—was on the 18th February, 1867, complied with by the Postmaster-General without, in the least degree, questioning the right of the House of Representatives to have that information.

Two instances occurring during the administration of President Hayes, under circumstances when there would be naturally a disposition on the part of the Executive to stand upon his constitutional rights, may be of interest. On the 9th January, 1879, the Senate passed a resolution directing the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit charges on file against the Supervising Inspector-General of Steamboats and the papers connected therewith; which was also promptly complied with.

At the same session a similar resolution called for papers on file in the Treasury Department "showing why—

Which is the same thing as giving the reasons—

Lieutenant Devereux was removed from the Revenue Marine Service," which was also complied with.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Georgia pardon me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. I think there is a very plain line of demarcation between those cases and the broad proposition that we can require the reason for an act in the sense in which that term has been used in this discussion. In the post-office case the word "reason" was used there perhaps inadvertently, but in the same sense as "what were the complaints made." The inquiry made is, "What were the complaints made?" I do not think, having given only slight attention to this matter, that those two cases go to the point where we can fathom the motive of an executive officer by inquiry.

Mr. BACON. There is no ground upon which it could be contended that Congress could demand reasons of a department while the Senate could not demand reasons. In each case if the right to demand reasons exists, it is because the information is needed in the discharge of constitutional functions, and the constitutional function exists in the case of the Senate as surely and as completely as it exists in Congress.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, before this important subject passes from the consideration of the Senate to-day I wish to say that I do not interpret the language the President has used at the end of his letter as committing him to the proposition that the Senate can not direct the heads of departments to communicate to the Senate information, documents, and papers on file in the departments required by the Senate in the course of its regular proceedings as a part of the legislative body of the Government; and I hope, Mr. President—and I think I may say I trust—that the Chief Magistrate of this Republic will not commit himself to that proposition. I for one am in complete accord with the proposition that it is not practicable for us to ransack the mind of an executive officer and demand from him the reason why he has or has not done a certain thing. I do not think that a feasible thing. I think it is going too far. I do not think it is needed in the quest in which the Senate is engaged to secure such information as may be the basis for proper and fitting action by this body.

But, Mr. President, if it shall ever be declared by any President that when the Senate, in dealing with legislation as a coordinate branch of the Government, as a part of the legislative branch, directs the head of a department to transmit papers and documents and information for the benefit of the Senate in that proper and legitimate quest, it is in his power and discretion to forbid it, it goes to the foundation of the right of this body to participate in legislation.

So vast is the domain of legislation and so correlated are the subjects between the different branches of the Government that there are but few great subjects upon which the Senate is not entitled to and needs information from the great departments of the Government. It can not legislate intelligently and satisfactorily unless it can call upon the departments for the information lodged in the archives of the departments. The great heads of departments are recognized by the Senate, which participates in their selection and confirms their appointments. They are a part of the entire Government, recognized not formally by, but under the operation of, the Constitution as a part of the Government. They are more than the head clerks of the President of the United States.

I do not sympathize with the proposition—I believe and hope it is not entertained in the mind of the President—that the heads of these great departments are to be lowered in their standing and their rank and are to be considered only as the head clerks of the President, and that when the Congress, the Senate, or the House directs information to help it in its action in legislating for the country the President can say, "These are my head clerks and I direct them to refuse this information."

Mr. President, I deprecate any such locking of horns on this great question. I do not agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] that the language of the President commits him to any such proposition. I do not believe that he will take that position. I do agree, as I have said, with the other proposition, and I think the bent and the purpose and the significance of the letter of the President dwell upon and surround the other proposition, of the right to call for reasons.

Only time will manifest how far this is to go. I think the Senator is wrong. I think he has put a forced construction upon the language of the President, and I hope and believe that we shall not be confronted with such a situation.

Mr. BACON. I should be very much gratified if the President would say that the construction put upon his language by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is correct. I do not think he will say so. If he will say so, I shall be content to let the matter rest; and if he had not used this language in the message, which in my opinion plainly and unmistakably implied the contrary, I should have said nothing.

I will say to the Senator from Maine and the Senate that the construction which I put upon it is the construction which has generally been put upon it. It has not only been put upon it by individuals but by the press.

I recollect that in this city a few days since one of the morning papers had an editorial upon the subject and applauded the President and commended him and approved him upon the ground that as the Senate had said that these departments should not of their own motion communicate directly with the Senate, but only through the President, it was nothing but right that no command should go from the Senate to the head of a department, but that all should go through the President.

Mr. HALE. Of course the Senator recognizes the distinction we have always maintained—and the Senate has been firm in it—that no Secretary can originate and send matter to the Senate?

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with that, of course.

Mr. HALE. That is another question.

Mr. BACON. I was speaking of the grounds upon which the editorial was based, recognizing, as it did, the language of the President to mean as I have construed it to mean.

Mr. HALE. But the other case, when the Senate directs that information be sent, presents an entirely distinct proposition.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator; but I am calling attention to the fact that others do not agree with him upon the construction which he puts upon the President's language.

Mr. HALE. I hope——

Mr. BACON. And I repeat, I hope the Senator is correct in the construction he places upon the President's language.

Mr. HALE. I hope I am correct.

Mr. BACON. If he is correct, the trouble is removed.

I think, so far as the question of reasons is concerned, that is a minor matter, but all information is what we are entitled to, whether it is documentary or otherwise. Everything that is known to the departments we are entitled to know, and if there are reasons why a law is ineffective, why that which was designed by the law, to wit, the prevention of the suppression of competition and the prevention of monopoly, can not be attained, and why in a noted instance there has been no attempt to enforce the law, it is important that we should know it in order that we may correct any defects there may be in the law, if such defects there be.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend at this late hour, and after the long debate, to discuss this question to any extent at least. I do not know whether the resolution will come up again soon, so that an opportunity will be afforded to be heard on it further. I believe it is not a special order. I believe it will go to the calendar if we do not act on it to-day. Does it not? I would ask, if it is in order, that it may lie on the table, to be called up at a subsequent time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado asks that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Georgia lie on the table, subject to call.

Mr. FULTON. Will that interfere with the special order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I will take occasion at some other time to express some opinions on this question. I recall very well the discussion which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has brought out here, and I think I know what the distinction was between the minority and the majority. But there is no time to go into that to-night.

I desire to say just a word about what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has said, that the members of the President's Cabinet are not mere clerks. That may depend upon who is at the head of the Government——

Mr. TILLMAN. And who are under him.

Mr. TELLER. And what kind of men may be at the head of departments. That has been the rule heretofore, I admit. The President may give directions generally to his Cabinet as to what his policy is; not, I think, as to details, but as to the general policy of his administration, and very properly. I do not think any self-respecting Secretary would take orders from the President a great while. I do not think we have had a great many Secretaries who would.

There are conditions under which the head of a department is absolutely independent of the President. Whenever there is a statute directing the head of a department to do a certain thing, he is absolutely independent of, and can take no orders from the President. He must obey the statute. That is his chief. Up to the time when something of that kind occurs, of course there should be, and probably always will be, a conference and consideration between the head of the Government and the Secretary who has to act. Whenever there is a statute that directs him to do a certain thing, the Secretary or any other officer of the Government must do it, or he must answer why.

I do not understand that this resolution really calls for what we call "reasons." The resolution offered—I have just looked at it—does say what reasons he gives for not having brought the suit. If it had said, "Will you tell us why you did not bring the suit?" I suppose it would have been just as well, and it would not have been the reasons. I do not believe, where an officer of the Government exercises a discretionary power lodged with him, that the Senate or anybody else can ask him for his reasons. He can do as he sees fit. When it comes to the performance of a statutory duty, then I say we may call upon him to state why he did or why he did not. Ordinarily you would not have to ask him why he did, but why he did not do it. That is what in this case the Senator from Texas wants to know.

When there is an opportunity, I want to speak a little more fully on this subject. Precedents do not entirely govern anybody, and yet a very large proportion of the law of this country comes from precedents. All of the common law comes from precedents. In the very beginning of this Government the Senate and the House independently, without consulting, called on the heads of departments for reports. Committees of the Senate have from time to time called the heads of departments before them to tell them what they wanted to know about the departments. I do not believe in the whole history of the Senate you can find a case where any head of a department has declined to respond. Why? Because nobody supposed they were independent of Congress—and a committee is an agent of Congress; one branch, of course. We are only one branch of Congress. But if Congress has the right to call on them in order to facilitate legislation, then one branch of it ought to be able to call on them in order to complete and perfect its legislation, which it must do with the other branch.

Fifty-four years ago one of the ablest men that ever was Attorney-General of the United States, Caleb Cushing, settled, I think, although I will not read it, for it is too long, what was the duty of the heads of departments. He recognized in the most ample manner the right of each branch of Congress to call on the head of a department, and that he must respond. He afterwards became, as all know, somewhat noted in the country, and was always regarded as a great lawyer, one whose legal acumen and legal ability were recognized even by his political opponents. He was a great lawyer in the minds even of men who did not agree with him on important questions of public affairs.

I think a hundred times, when a resolution was presented requesting some officer of the Cabinet to report, I have seen a Senator rise and say "the Senate does not request anybody but the President; the Senate directs." I remember that within a very few weeks after I came into the Senate Senator Edmunds, sitting about where the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] sits now, if I recollect correctly, with a good deal of dignity, when a question of that kind was presented, said emphatically, "The Senate never requests an officer to do anything; it commands."

Mr. HALE. Directs.

Mr. TELLER. Directs; and he moved to have it amended, and the word "direct" went into the resolution.

Mr. President, I have never forgotten that. I have myself again and again asked to have a resolution or whatever it might be amended so as to read "directed." That is worth something, at least as a precedent. I do not suppose there ever was a session of Congress in which we did not direct a department to furnish information. I hope, with the Senator from Maine, that the President does not intend what his words plainly import; that he does not intend to say that his heads of departments will not respond.

I want to say one word about what the Senator from Oregon has said—that we can not do anything about it. We have not had the power to do anything about it for more than a century. We have been doing it, and everybody has responded upon the theory that every man holding a public office will do his duty when called upon to do it. There has been no occasion to provide a penalty for one who has failed to reply. I know sometimes we have had delay in getting replies, but nobody has ever said before that they would not reply and no head of a department has said that yet.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to leave this matter, and when it comes up again I will want to say a few words upon it, more in the way of citing precedents than of making remarks.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Colorado before he takes his seat. I should like to take advantage of this occasion to inquire if, in the judgment of the Senator from Colorado, all the communications addressed to the executive department of the Government should not properly be addressed to the President, and as to whether any communication is proper between the Senate of the United States or the Congress and any one less than the head of one of the coordinate branches of the Government.

Mr. TELLER. I will respond to that by saying that, whatever might be the ethics of the question originally, one hundred years and more have made it very reputable and respectable for the Senate of the United States to call upon a government officer. Perhaps in theory it would be true that we ought to ask the President, as the head of the executive branch of the Government, but we never did that, not even in the days when there was greater punctiliousness and greater feeling on the part of the President, at least, in the early days, as to his prerogatives. We never did it even then; but I do not think any President has ever complained of it at any time. So I can not answer what ought to have been done, but I can answer what has been done.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely suggest that I have always been impressed with the idea, since I have been a member of this body, that communications from this coordinate branch of the Government ought to be addressed to the head of whatever coordinate branch of the Government the information is sought to be obtained from. It has always seemed to me that that should be the rule.

I have some doubt in my mind—I do not know that the question has been ultimately settled—as to the extent of the authority of Congress over a Cabinet officer. The term "Cabinet officer" has no legal origin. They are not constitutional officers or officers under the Constitution of the United States. While in the Belknap trial the question would doubtless have been raised, it has not to my knowledge been determined that there is any power of impeachment over a Cabinet officer, because it is not an office created or contemplated by the Constitution.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator from Idaho that, leaving out the Belknap case—I will not touch that—we have in a hundred cases, at least, directed heads of departments by statute.

Mr. HEYBURN. I know the fact, but I was merely questioning the practice.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, there has been no effort made here or elsewhere to direct a Cabinet officer. He has been directed, as the head of an executive department. A man can be a Cabinet officer without being the head of an executive department. There is no law on the statute book which makes the Postmaster-General a member of the Cabinet of the President of the United States. What made that officer a member of the Cabinet? It was a note of three lines from General Jackson to Mr. Barry, then Postmaster-General, requiring him, or inviting him, to attend the Cabinet meeting the next day and thereafter. That made him a Cabinet officer.

Mr. HALE. He had never attended a Cabinet meeting before.

Mr. MONEY. He had never attended a Cabinet meeting before; and had never dreamed of attending one.

I want to say to the Senator from Idaho, the President can make every Assistant Attorney-General, every Assistant Postmaster-General, every Assistant Secretary of the Interior, or Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, or elsewhere, Cabinet offices if he chooses to call them into council.

Mr. TILLMAN. Even in the kitchen cabinet.

Mr. MONEY. He can make anybody who is not a member of one of the other coordinate branches of the Government a Cabinet officer. Nobody here is consulting or directing or requesting any Cabinet officer to do anything. He is the President's councilor, whom he chooses as he pleases.

Now, when it comes to an executive officer, that is an entirely different business. I am not going to continue this debate to supplement in any way the extremely able and lucid speech of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] or the brief and able and lucid speech of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. To my mind, there is a very substantial agreement between the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Maine, because I think the Senator from Maine has somewhat confounded reasons with motives. When we ask an executive officer why he has not complied with the law, it is a perfectly pertinent question which we need to ask in the discharge of those functions which are devolved upon us by the Constitution. It is a legitimate inquiry which he is compelled to answer. It is made so by law. There is no inquiry into the motives that impelled him to decline his duty under the law; it is no search into his private reasons, but it is a demand for the public reasons that impelled him from the execution of the law devolved upon him.

I say, and I am glad to hear the Senator from Maine say, that there is no authority by the Constitution or the laws resting in the President of the United States to instruct any member of the Cabinet to withhold information of any sort demanded by the Senate or the House. These two bodies are absolutely independent and must perform their duty as they see it, not as it is seen by any head of a department or any head of the executive branch of the Government.

It may be said that it is extremely unfortunate that all men who seek public offices do not devote a little time to the study of the law. It would certainly teach some people some accuracy of thought and some precision of expression. There is so much slashing around through the whole vocabulary of words that we do not know half the time what is meant when we receive communications from certain quarters. It might be said that whenever the President of the United States—I speak it with great respect to that high office—proceeds to direct the head of a department not to respond to the direction for information from this body or from the other House—by the by, he says the "upper" and "lower" House—there is no such distinction in the phraseology of our Constitution or of our law—I say when he presumes or assumes to give such direction, it can be considered only as a misunderstanding of the language of the Constitution and the law or as a piece of official insolence. The Senate must respect itself. It must consider the great duty that has been devolved upon it by the Constitution. It must maintain its self-respect, not simply for its own sake, but because of the high duty it owes to the States that send its Members here and to the people represented by those States.

It would be impossible, Mr. President, for me to make things plainer than they have been made already, and I have only risen to say this much because it was called forth by the remark made by the Senator from Idaho, who unfortunately confuses Cabinet officers with heads of executive departments.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HEYBURN. I want to understand the last remark of the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Idaho wants to make some further inquiry, and I will yield to him. I withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not hear distinctly the closing remark of the Senator from Mississippi as to the question that I had raised.

Mr. MONEY. I said that my remark was only called forth by the fact that confusion seemed to exist in your mind as to whether this communication was addressed to a member of the Cabinet or to the head of an executive office. The things are entirely different.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not mean to be understood quite within so close a limitation. The inquiry in my mind was as to whether it should be addressed to the President as the chief executive officer or to a subordinate under the President; and I suggested that there was a question as to our power to enforce an order against a Cabinet officer because of the failure of the power of impeachment or punishment in any way; that the test of our power is found in our ability to enforce our mandate; that was all.

Mr. MONEY. I understood the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is what I intended to bring out.

Mr. MONEY. I understood the language of the Senator, and it was that language which called forth my speech. You spoke of a Cabinet officer. We are talking about the head of an executive department.

Mr. HEYBURN. I said there is no such thing as a Cabinet officer under the law.

Mr. CULLOM. I withhold my motion, further, to give an opportunity to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] to bring up a joint resolution.

INAUGURAL PERMITS.

Mr. SCOTT. At the urgent request of those in charge of the ceremonies for the inauguration on the 4th of March, I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate joint resolution 106.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 106) authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has been heretofore read as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary will read the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 8, after the word "regulations," the committee report to insert "and limitations as to space," so as to make the first section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to grant a permit to the committee on inaugural ceremonies for the use of the Pension building in the city of Washington on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on the 4th day of March, 1909, subject to such restrictions and regulations and limitations as to space as the said Secretary may prescribe in respect of the period and manner of such use, including all necessary safeguards against fire and for the extinguishing of fire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Will not the Senator who has the bill in charge tell us what it is?

Mr. SCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that it is a joint resolution, which was read the other day. It makes the same provision that has been made for every inauguration since 1805.

Mr. TELLER. It provides for the use of the Pension building?

Mr. SCOTT. It provides for the use of the Pension building and provides for extra police, who will look after pickpockets and others who come here and enable the city to see that the visitors here are properly cared for. It is in the same form as the joint resolutions which have been passed heretofore.

Mr. TELLER. I only wanted to say that if it provides for the use of the Pension Office, there are certain rooms that ought to be reserved for the use of the Pension Office, where they can put their files, and so forth, and not have to remove them from the building.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the two upper stories will not be disturbed, and instead of the space of twenty days that has heretofore been suggested, the committee of arrangements state that they will ask for only eight consecutive days, two of those being Sundays, so that the employees on the first floor will lose only a week.

Mr. TELLER. If two stories are not to be occupied for this purpose, there will be plenty of room in the Pension Office for storing the papers.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE NEAR ST. PAUL, MINN.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 23866) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

It proposes to amend section 9 of the act so as to read:

SEC. 9. That this act shall be null and void if actual construction of the bridge herein authorized shall not be commenced within one year and completed within four years from the date hereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I now insist on my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 14, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate January 13, 1909.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 13, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain of the Senate, Rev. Edward Everett Hale.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 653) to authorize commissions to issue in the cases of officers of the army retired with increased rank, disagreed to by the House, agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. TALIAFERRO as conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table, under the rule, and referred as follows:

S. 7925. An act to create an additional land district in the State of Montana, to be known as the "Harlowton land district"—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 7992. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," approved May 22, 1908—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

S. 7918. An act for the relief of Bernard W. Murray—to the Committee on Claims.

S. 7257. An act providing a means for acquiring title to private holdings in the Sequoia and General Grant national parks in the State of California, in which are big trees and other natural curiosities and wonders—to the Committee on Appropriations.

LINCOLN POSTAGE STAMP.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of House joint resolution 216, which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and to consider the same at this time in the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 216.

Resolved, etc., That the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to design and issue a special postage stamp of the denomination of 2 cents in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does not the department, without asking the consent of Congress, fix stamps?

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, I would say to my friend from Missouri that I really believe the Postmaster-General, under existing law, would have authority to do this very thing, although there is naturally some reluctance in issuing a special commemorative stamp on account of the birth of any man in the history of this Republic without the authority of Congress. My friend can easily see what it might lead to in the future if the Postmaster-General, on his own responsibility, designed and issued a memorial stamp to mark the birth of any statesman in the history of the Republic.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is to be a 2-cent stamp?

Mr. DAWSON. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is he to go on and make it perpetual or just for this year, or what is it?

Mr. DAWSON. This is to be a commemorative stamp. As I understand it, this particular issue of stamps, designed and issued to mark the centenary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, would be a distinctive stamp. A certain number of these stamps would be issued and then that issue cease.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It does not interfere with the ordinary George Washington stamp?

Mr. DAWSON. Not at all, but I may say for the information of my friend from Missouri and for the information of the House that a probable result will be that in the future the head of Abraham Lincoln will be retained on one of the stamps of the Government, probably the 5-cent issue.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have no earthly objection to his picture being on the stamp. I saw a statement in a newspaper not long ago that somebody down there who has authority, or seems to have authority, has issued stamps two or three times with the picture of Abraham Lincoln and then withdrew them. My own opinion about it is that pictures on stamps ought to be of well-known people, so they are hard to counterfeit.

Mr. DAWSON. The head of Lincoln has been on stamps of various issues, some of which have been discontinued.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa a question. What good will this do, and what will be the expense to the Government?

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that I need not advert to the fact that it will be entirely fitting for this Government to mark in a modest way the one hundredth anniversary of the man who had so much to do with the preservation of the Government itself. Lincoln stands out as the typical American, and his rise from obscurity to the very pinnacle of fame is a source of constant inspiration to the youth who come after him. I believe there is a universal desire among the people of the United States that we should mark this centenary.

Mr. MANN. By issuing a stamp?

Mr. DAWSON. Not necessarily. If this proposition has any merit in it at all, it has the merit that it will bring this great event to the mind and attention of every man, woman, and child in the United States, and I know of no other plan which would so successfully accomplish this result.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman doubt that any person in the United States of reading age will know that this is the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln?

Mr. DAWSON. Oh, no; but this special 2-cent stamp, the gentleman will agree, will bring the fact in close contact with the daily activities of our people.

Mr. MANN. What will be the expense to the Government—I do not mean in preparing the stamp merely, but in sending out a separate issue of stamps to every post-office in the United States?

Mr. DAWSON. I will say to my friend that I can not answer that question specifically; but by issuing a single 2-cent stamp I understand that the difficulty and additional expense that has heretofore been had in the Post-Office Department with respect to the issue of a series of commemorative stamps will be obviated, and the necessity of keeping separate accounts will be obviated.

Mr. MANN. I do not understand it that way. I think the accounts will still have to be kept separate for this issue of stamps. It seems to me we ought to have information on that point. It probably would not lie in the mouth of any gentleman in the House to object to a request of this sort. I happen to come from the State from which Abraham Lincoln came, as far as the Presidency is concerned.

Mr. DAWSON. I will say to the gentleman, I had a conference with the Postmaster-General regarding this matter. My original intention was to present a resolution providing for an entire series of stamps. There was an objection to issuing an entire series, for the reason which the gentleman has set forth; but I understood from the Postmaster-General that that objection would be obviated if we authorize simply a 2-cent stamp, which will go out to the postmasters of the country on requisition practically the same as any other 2-cent stamp.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire whether the image of Abraham Lincoln had not been on a 2-cent stamp some twenty years ago?

Mr. DAWSON. My recollection is that the head of Washington has always occupied a permanent place on 2-cent postage stamps since the years of the 2-cent postage.

Mr. KEIFER. I was under the impression—but let me inquire. The resolution seems to provide that the Postmaster-General is authorized to design an issue of special postage stamps of the denomination of 2 cents in commemoration of the one-hundredth anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln. Now, does it contemplate anything else than merely putting on the face of the 2-cent stamp the image of Abraham Lincoln?

Mr. DAWSON. By the terms of the resolution, Mr. Speaker, the design of the stamp is left entirely with the Postmaster-General; and my understanding is that by reason of the brief period of time between now and the 12th day of February, when it is desired to have these stamps put on the market, it will consist principally of the head or face of Abraham Lincoln.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS NIOBRARA MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the Senate bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 8143) granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under the laws of the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, and Michigan, which has become the owner of and is engaged in the operation of the railroad constructed by the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across and through the Niobrara Military Reservation, located in the State of Nebraska, under and pursuant to the provisions of an act entitled "An act granting right of way to the Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company across the Niobrara Military Reservation in the State of Nebraska," which was passed and approved on the 28th day of February, A. D. 1883, is hereby granted the right to change the location of its right of way and of its railroad where they now cross the south half of section 8, township 33 north, range 27 west of the sixth principal meridian, and is hereby granted in place of said right of way granted to the said Fremont, Elkhorn and Missouri Valley Railroad Company by the said act of February 28, 1883, a new right of way not exceeding 400 feet in width, to be so selected as not to interfere with any buildings or improvements on said reservation, and the location thereof to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, across and through that portion of said military reservation embraced within said south half of section 8, township 33 north, range 27 west of the sixth principal meridian.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, from reading the bill I understand this gives them a title to the right of way across a military reservation. There is no reservation in it by which Congress can hereafter require them to move their road if it should see proper to do so. Is that correct?

Mr. KINKAID. I think the intention is in case of nonuser of right of way it would revert to the Government.

Mr. PAYNE. No; but suppose the Government should want the land and require them to move away, there is nothing in the act which would give the Government that right, is there?

Mr. KINKAID. It is in the usual form, but I, at his request, will defer to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is all subject to the approval of the Secretary of War. They surrender more than twice as much of the reservation as they take. It shortens the road, makes a more direct line, and avoids a very steep grade. It is in the form that all these bills are in. I suppose the Secretary of War, if the Government needed it, could take it up. It will never be done, however.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether they could or not, and I do not know whether the original grant is that way or not. The Government made a grant of a reservation in the city of Oswego, in my own State, reserving the right to cancel the right of way and compel the railroad company to move, and in the last three or four years they have compelled the railroad company at great expense to get a new right of way, because they wanted to use the reservation.

Mr. KINKAID. If the gentleman will permit, I will explain to the gentleman from New York that it has been the intention of the War Department and the administration for some time to have this military reservation abandoned as such. But it has not yet been carried out. It is not now being used as a military reservation, and I regret that the prospects are that it may not be continued as such. The language of the present bill is the same as the language of the original bill, in legal effect, at least, and this bill will require very much less the amount of area than the original bill—about one-half. It removes the right of way further from where the post site exists, and removes it to the edge of the reservation. The purpose of the bill is to give the road an opportunity to construct a new bridge in place of an old wooden bridge 25 years old, and secure a better grade. The present bridge is about 80 feet above the river. The new bridge will be at least 58 feet higher, so that the grade will be improved accordingly. The new bridge will be a first-class steel structure, so that the public will be greatly benefited by the change, and the public in general is therefore concerned in the change.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. What distance across the reservation is asked for in this right of way?

Mr. KINKAID. Twenty-two hundred feet. The distance now occupied by the right of way is three-quarters of a mile, so that the distance is only about one-half, or less than one-half.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Does the gentleman think that it is necessary to give them a right of way 400 feet in width?

Mr. KINKAID. It is, for the peculiar reason that they wish to improve the grade, and the banks of the river are very high, and the grade will be considerable at best. They need this for the purpose of handling dirt, and will have to occupy about all of it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Is it not a fact that that is just about four times the width of an ordinary railroad right of way?

Mr. KINKAID. Oh, yes, it is, sir; but not under such conditions. The right of way under such conditions in many cases is equally great.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. What becomes of the present right of way?

Mr. KINKAID. It reverts to the Government and goes back to the reservation.

Mr. MANN. So that the Government acquires a little more than it gives?

Mr. KINKAID. It acquires somewhat more than it gives; yes.

Mr. PAYNE. In embankments on the present right of way?

Mr. KINKAID. There is some, but not half so great as this will be.

Mr. PAYNE. So that the Government gets improvements by the way of embankments, which, of course, would destroy the commercial value of the property that is given.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman will yield, I would like to say a word or two on this matter.

Mr. KINKAID. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. This right of way is over a section of the country where they have granted to homesteaders 640 acres if they will undertake to live on it. It is a section of country where the land is of comparatively no value, being largely sand hills. They run in on the reservation now and circle around through. This makes a short cut across the reservation. According to the War Department, it is necessary to make the grant 400 feet wide. I raised the point that this was an unusual width to give and ought not to be done, and the War Department in its report says that on account of high embankments and the character of the soil it is claimed that they must have an extra right of way in width.

Now, I regard it as of no value to the Government. It is of great value to the road and to all the people on that line of road—the town of Valentine and all those settlements up and down the road. At present the road where it approaches this bridge has to make a dip down to the bridge, and a very steep grade to get up to its level again. My information was that it was more than 100 feet from the river bed to the top of this bridge. The gentleman says it is 58 feet.

Mr. KINKAID. Eighty feet to the present bridge, and the new bridge will be 138 feet, making it 58 feet higher.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is one of those cases where they must come to Congress for the privilege of making this great improvement. It requires an outlay of money on the part of the road, but ultimately will be of great benefit to it, I have no doubt.

Now, coming back to the point that the gentleman referred to, in all cases where the Government supposes that it will need the land again, the right to change the location of the road or to vacate the grant is always reserved, but in this case it is an entirely different proposition. The land is of no value, and if open to sale would not bring $5.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to ask the gentleman, in connection with that, if the Government gives a right of way to a railroad company, giving them a perpetual easement in land, so that the Government can not afterwards reclaim it unless the railroad abandon the line, why should not the railroad company do as they do with individuals—pay whatever the land is worth?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The land is not in the market. They can not buy it. If they did buy it, they probably would pay about a dollar and a quarter an acre, and all the rest of the land, at a dollar and a quarter an acre, would lie there forever without anybody buying it.

Mr. MANN. It amounts to as much as four or five dollars altogether?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. It is 400 feet in width.

Mr. MANN. And 2,200 feet long.

Mr. PAYNE. My friend here says it is less than a quarter of a mile. That is not according to my arithmetic.

Mr. KINKAID. No, sir; not at all. I said 2,200 feet.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I believe that the grant of this land will benefit all the people of that part of Nebraska and South Dakota; it can not harm anybody, and it will enable the road to make an improvement that is absolutely necessary, in order to do its work as it should be done for the people.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman right here that I am opposed to the Government granting a perpetual right of way over any of its reservations without compensation.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We did it at Fort Reno Reservation.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand from the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] that this grant is in the same language as the original grant, which was for a strip of land about three-quarters of a mile in length and 100 feet wide.

Mr. KINKAID. One hundred and fifty feet.

Mr. PAYNE. We are giving away a good deal more land than we get back; but because of the facts stated I do not care to object to this bill. I do think, however, that the Military Committee should take that into consideration in regard to future grants—that wherever we make a donation to a railroad company, whether it is a dollar or $10,000, there ought to be a provision in it that the Government at any time may change the route or compel them to move off the reservation. It proved to be of great value to the Government in the city of Oswego that they had that right. They had a chance to sell the land there, as I remember it, and the railroad moved off. They compelled the railroad to move off from the reservation, and at large expense to acquire a right of way, just as in all civilized communities railroad companies are required to get it by paying the owner. They always should pay the owner what the land is worth, whether the United States or an individual is the owner. But as I am assured that the railroad company already have this perpetual right of way in a strip of land not quite so large, and that they need the dirt for filling, 400 feet in width—I hope the gentleman knows that of his own knowledge, because if he does not, I am very much disposed to doubt the assertion that they need so much for an embankment—I will not make an objection this morning. But I want to give warning to the Committee on Military Affairs, if they bring in any bills similar to this without making some provision for payment for the absolute right of way in perpetuity, I shall object hereafter.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to say for the information of the gentleman that the railroad would have been glad to pay for the land, but there was no way they could buy it.

Mr. PAYNE. You could put the permission into this act and allow them to buy it and fix the price.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska who owns this land?

Mr. KINKAID. The Government owns it, because it is a military reservation. The railroad has a right of way over it twice as long as the distance they now ask for, and that will revert to the Government. The Government will get back more than it gives away.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want a little more information. This land does not belong to the Indians?

Mr. KINKAID. No; and never did.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where is the land situated?

Mr. KINKAID. In northwestern Nebraska, near the South Dakota Sioux Reservation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has the Speaker approved of it? [Laughter.]

Mr. KINKAID. Oh, yes. [Laughter.] If recognition is approval.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska if he would be willing to accept an amendment to the bill providing that the right to amend, alter, or repeal the act is reserved.

Mr. KINKAID. If that were usual in such cases, and we had some decisions well establishing the law on the question, I would know better how to answer the gentleman; but as the original bill was the same in legal effect and form as this and is a Senate bill and not my own, and inasmuch as the Government will get back more than this will take, I should feel that I ought to say that I could not consent to that, but I would not object, of course, to the railway company being required to pay the reasonable value of the land.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman says the purpose of the bill is to construct a bridge, as I understand it.

Mr. KINKAID. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In every act Congress has passed, and they are frequently passed, providing for the construction of bridges by railways across navigable streams, it is the invariable custom, never departed from, to reserve the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act.

Mr. KINKAID. This is not a navigable stream.

Mr. MANN. It may not be a navigable stream, but it grants authority to build a bridge across the government property. The authority in other cases is granted to build a bridge across property the Government does not own, but here is a proposition to give away property which the Government does own. There is no difference in theory as to the right to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. KINKAID. There is a difference in regard to whether it is navigable or not; this is across a military reservation, which may be abandoned.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if that proviso in bills authorizing the building of bridges is not to protect navigation as it developed in the future, so if the bridge becomes an obstruction to navigation in the future it can be taken away?

Mr. MANN. It is in cases where the Government gives a franchise and reserves the right to alter, amend or repeal, and it ought to be done in every bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman if the Secretary of War has approved this bill?

Mr. KINKAID. The Secretary of War has approved of it unqualifiedly.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the bill conform to the statute that was passed at the last Congress requiring all bills to conform to a certain form?

Mr. KINKAID. It does not violate any statute at all, and it was acceptable to the Judge-Advocate of the War Department, who is especially well informed on these questions.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When did the gentleman introduce the bill?

Mr. KINKAID. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When was it introduced in the Senate?

Mr. KINKAID. On the 11th of this month. Let me explain. The railroad company wants to get to shoveling dirt right away, because the present bridge, besides being so low and the grade being so great that they have to double team on the west side of the river with extra engines, is 25 years old, a wooden structure, and therefore we do not know that it is entirely safe, and they want to get to throwing dirt, I understand, soon. That is why we are pressing the bill as rapidly as we can.

Mr. MANN. Then, I think the gentleman had better accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object, Mr. Speaker, unless the gentleman will accept the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] will yield, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. KINKAID. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is confusing the provisions in legislation granting authority to construct bridges over navigable streams with the usual legislation granting rights of way to construct railways over the public lands. The two cases are not parallel. When a bridge is built over a navigable stream the facilities for navigation must be protected, and it is customary to reserve the right in the Government to amend or modify the franchise as the public needs may require.

On the other hand, it has been the universal policy of the Government from the beginning, so far as I have observed, and I am quite familiar with the subject, to grant the free right of way to railway corporations, and to all companies of a quasi public kind, that will construct railways and highways in the West through all of the public lands, and particularly for the purpose of railway construction. Now, if this right of way were upon any of the public lands except what had been heretofore used as a military or some other reservation, the company would have the absolute right by simply filing a plat with the Secretary of the Interior to modify or change its right of way, and in no case, so far as I am aware, has there ever been insisted upon a provision that a railway company building a railway across the public lands of the United States should be required to submit to a provision that Congress or the Government might at some future time, or at any time, require a modification of the grant.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is evidently mistaken as to the legislation of Congress during the last few years on the subject of rights of way through reservations.

Mr. MARTIN. On the subject of bridges over navigable streams, the gentleman from Illinois is correct, but as to the subject of rights of way for railways over pubilc lands I am sure my recollection is right.

Mr. MANN. I think in every case it is provided that either the Congress or the War Department shall have absolute control over the question of the right of way and the continuance as a right of way.

Mr. MARTIN. The injustice and the impracticability of that sort of a provision in the ordinary construction of a railway in the West will appear, I think, on a moment's reflection. It would be a matter of comparatively little importance to this company or any other company building a railway that it should pay the reasonable value outright for the land used for the right of way. It would be a matter of infinite inconvenience and possible damage if it might be subject to the will of anyone in the future and forced to arbitrarily change its right of way. In this particular instance——

Mr. MANN. The same is true about a railway bridge over a stream.

Mr. MARTIN. Over a navigable stream only, for the reason that there is the purpose of river navigation to be conserved, which is of equal importance with that of railway transportation.

Mr. MANN. It is just as much trouble for the railway to change for one reason or the other, and it has never stopped a railway building a bridge up to date.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I have never been aware of any provision of that sort as to any construction of railways over the government lands. Of course we do not grant specifically by Congress provision to build bridges over nonnavigable streams. That goes as a matter of right to the railway, and so there has been no legislation on the subject, except the general legislation granting a right of way. The act of 1875 now upon the statute books gives absolutely over all of the public lands in the United States the right to a railway or other quasi public corporation to construct its railway, whether it is across interior streams or otherwise. I am somewhat familiar with this particular case, as it is a road which I travel over almost invariably in going to and from my home. The circumstances are these: Some twenty-five years ago this railway built its line up through western Nebraska and into the Black Hills country of western South Dakota, in which I live. As is common in the early building of railways, its right of way was more or less circuitous. Now, in the day of more traffic, provision is being made to accommodate these circumstances, and one of the necessary things is the straightening and shortening of this right of way where it runs through these public lands, then in a military reservation.

The road as now constructed through that country makes quite a circle. My own opinion is that in the making of proper abutments and approaches to this high bridge, something over 138 feet, it will probably be necessary to use all or most of the 400 feet asked for that purpose. Now, it is a simple proposition in which a railway with a right of way over that reservation, the reservation being practically abandoned for military purposes, a part in every sense of the great public lands of the United States, desires to straighten its course through that part of the country. It is wild, unused land, of insignificant and nominal value. I am sure the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] could have no great objection to the railway paying the value of it if anybody insisted upon that, but the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], I am sure, in the face of a great public improvement of this kind, which will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars, would be a very serious modification of the usual custom regarding railway construction in the West.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. If any municipality owned this particular piece of land, would it not be regarded in the light of enlightened public policy in regard to these matters for that municipality to demand such an amendment as is suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. MARTIN. Oh, if it were within the corporate limits of a municipality, I can see where there would be occasion for it. Out on the open prairie, in a country where the land about is probably not worth to exceed $5 per acre, I can not see any real reason for a reservation of this kind.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. If the land belonged to a municipality—never mind whether it is within the corporate limits or is in actual use or there is reasonable expectation it will be in actual use—but if it belongs to a municipality or a private individual and we were giving something for nothing, granting a right, would it not be regarded as proper that this protection which the gentleman suggests, and which as a provision now goes into every franchise and charter that is granted in my State—surely not the most unfriendly State in the Union to corporations—does the gentleman not think that when we are giving something it is only fair that we should safeguard the interests of the Government to the extent suggested by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MARTIN. The interests of the Government and the people of the States always should be safeguarded to the fullest limit, and my own opinion on the question which the gentleman asks is this: If the inconvenience to the grantee is out of all commensurate proportion to any possible damage to the grantor, or out of proportion to the value of any grant, I would say that a reservation of that kind would be very unreasonable.

Now, perhaps the value in this grant that is in existence at the present time is $5 an acre, the acreage is——

A MEMBER. A dollar and a quarter; not over.

Mr. MARTIN. The value in controversy is not worth over $25.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is not worth $5.

Mr. MARTIN. I am surely making a liberal estimate of Nebraska land when I say it is not worth over $25. Now, here is a proposition to a company that will put an improvement on their road of perhaps a half a million dollars that, if they exchange for this purpose a right of way worth $25, they shall be subject to arbitrary dictation by anybody or somebody at some time which may force them to move or modify some of their work which has cost a half a million dollars. Now, the paying for the land is insignificant, but it is certainly a hardship on the company to put anything in the bill that would force them to be subject to the will of anybody as changing arbitrarily the location of the project, and it would be an infinitely serious matter.

Mr. KINKAID. With the permission of the gentleman from South Dakota I would like to answer further: This is on the outskirts of the reservation; the present right of way is in the interior part. If this reservation were used for a military reservation the Government would never use this part at all. This cuts across just the border of it, and the whole of the reservation is liable to be restored to the public domain and made subject to the homestead laws, so that the Government would no longer be interested in this as a military reservation, and that would remove the foundations entirely of the contention that the Government should reserve any right whatever. If the reservation should be discontinued as a military reservation and made subject to the homestead laws, this change would benefit the homesteaders by giving them more land to homestead, because this takes less right of way.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Now, if the gentleman will permit, my position is this: I do not think it is proper for this House to give any kind of unreserved grant, no matter how small it may appear to be. It is quite evident that this grant has some value; it is quite evident that somebody wants it and is here asking this House to give it to him. Now, if it be true that the original grant is a perpetual grant, I do not believe it is good policy to make this a perpetual grant so that both grants will be consistent. I think, if the gentleman will permit, that if this amendment will give the Government any advantage, restore it to somewhere near the position that it would have had if the language had been placed in the original grant; if it restores to the hands of the Government any weapon which it never should have relinquished, that it should be adopted. So far as the danger of the Government arbitrarily using this power is concerned, I do not think the gentlemen will contend that there is any danger of that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25392, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25392, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and by unanimous consent and agreement reached last evening the first paragraph is in order, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34. Playgrounds: For maintenance and renewal of equipment and planting trees for outdoor playgrounds, $1,500.

The Clerk read the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS], as follows:

Amend, on page 34, lines 13 and 14, by striking out the words "one thousand five hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen thousand."

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I offer is an amendment which, if adopted, would provide an appropriation of $15,000 for the maintenance of the playgrounds in the District, as against the $1,500 which the committee has provided in the bill. Last year the appropriation bill provided only $1,500 for maintenance; but the maintenance and the grounds cost $18,000, of which only $1,500 was contributed by appropriation. The rest of the money was raised by outsiders. Severals years ago we started on the policy of school playgrounds and municipal playgrounds. There are now in the District 18 school playgrounds and 13 municipal playgrounds, making in all 31. The contributions last year were raised at——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will excuse me for a moment——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman a question right there. How much land is there in these playgrounds, and where are the playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. The school playgrounds are some areas immediately surrounding the schools. The municipal playgrounds are scattered all over the District, and vary in extent from about 1 acre to 5 acres.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many acres are there, all told?

Mr. PARSONS. I can not say exactly. I suppose that the 13 municipal playgrounds altogether comprise about 25 acres.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many schools are to be supplied?

Mr. PARSONS. There are 18 school playgrounds, but they are very small areas that adjoin the schools. Last year the $18,000 that was raised for the playgrounds was contributed in this way: In response to letters $2,000 was raised. They had a tag day, and they raised $8,260.51. Then they had a river excursion and a baseball game, by which they raised $378.

Then, in October Mrs. Roosevelt had an entertainment by the Ben Greet players on the White House grounds and raised $1,932. Then the children who use these playgrounds were allowed to contribute, and they contributed $3,911, two and one-half times as much as you appropriated. Last year in the appropriation bill there was also appropriated $5,000 for equipping one of the playgrounds, but the appropriation for maintenance was only $1,500. The only appropriation this year in connection with the playgrounds is one for maintenance—$1,500.

The attendance at the playgrounds has increased very largely since they first started, and is continually increasing. Playgrounds are now maintained by over a hundred cities in the United States. Our policy has been determined, and the question is, having got the playgrounds, Are we going to provide the money necessary to maintain them? Fifteen thousand dollars would go a long ways toward that, although it would not be quite sufficient. There would still have to be a voluntary subscription.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, what are the items of expense entering into the maintenance or making up the cost of the playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. The main items are teachers and attendants. I think that amounts to about $10,000, out of $18,000. The other items I can not give the gentleman in detail.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, where is this land located that is to be bought?

Mr. PARSONS. No land is to be bought. This is simply for maintaining the playgrounds we now have in the District, seeing that they are properly utilized, and that the small children as well as the large children have an opportunity to use them, and that the weak children have an equal opportunity with the strong ones.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman intend to say that they are going to use $15,000 to keep up these thirteen playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. Fifteen thousand dollars? It will cost $18,000 at least, and probably $21,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What are you going to do with the money?

Mr. PARSONS. Some of it is needed for equipment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, how much?

Mr. PARSONS. I can not give the gentleman the items exactly, but the most of it is used for attendants—teachers to supervise the playgrounds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Teachers to supervise the playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. Teachers to supervise the playgrounds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are they not already provided for?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] has expired.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where are those teachers to come from?

Mr. PARSONS. They come from the District.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are they already in the employ of the Government as teachers?

Mr. PARSONS. I do not know whether they are or not. I do not know how they are selected.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do they teach?

Mr. PARSONS. They supervise the use of the playgrounds. You can not have playgrounds in cities unless you supervise them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do you mean to say you are going to employ teachers to teach the children how to play? And how much is going to be paid for that?

Mr. PARSONS. On an acre of ground there may be 600 children to play.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They can play without being taught.

Mr. PARSONS. They can not play without being supervised.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Whose children are they?

Mr. PARSONS. The children of the people of the District, and mostly poor children.

Mr. SABATH. It is absolutely necessary to have some one in charge, is it not?

Mr. PARSONS. It is absolutely necessary to have some one in charge. The experience of other cities has been that if you have playgrounds that are not supervised, you have to abandon your playgrounds, because the large and strong boys come there and monopolize the playground, and there is no opportunity for the smaller children, the girls, and the weaker children, to utilize the playgrounds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. You say the big boys come there and monopolize the playgrounds, and you want a teacher to teach the boys how not to monopolize. Why not get a policeman to do that, and not pay $18,000 a year?

Mr. PARSONS. It will cost a great deal more than $18,000 to have the thing done by the police, I will venture to say.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are not policemen already employed to keep in order all the public parks of the city of Washington?

Mr. PARSONS. It would require the time of at least 31 policemen, and take them away from their other duties, to take care of this work.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Are not policemen stationed in the vicinity of all the schools already, and do they not watch every park in the city of Washington now?

Mr. PARSONS. I never saw them.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I have.

Mr. PARSONS. I do not believe they do and I do not believe they can.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They police the White House grounds and Jackson square, and they police all the parks that I have ever walked through and all that I have ever seen anybody else walk through.

Mr. PARSONS. Does not the gentleman understand that if you have five or six hundred children on an acre lot in an afternoon, if they are all going to get exercise you must have somebody there to see that all have a chance and to organize the kind of games that will call upon all of them to take part.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will tell you what I saw when I came through the city of Cincinnati not long ago. I saw a playground, a little park, and a lot of children were out there, swinging just as you and I have swung. There were no teachers there, so far as I saw. All were children. Everybody could go there. Everyone seemed to be swinging and playing, and they were all enjoying themselves.

Mr. PARSONS. How many children were there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, I presume there were 25 or 30.

Mr. PARSONS. Suppose there had been 600 children there?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The park was not big enough for that.

Mr. PARSONS. Oh, well, that is one of the difficulties. The parks are not big enough.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But there was no teacher there to teach the 25 or 30 children that I saw to play. Nobody taught them how to play "leap frog" and "bull pen," and all the other things that children play; "skin the cat," and all the rest of the games for children. This is a game to skin the District treasury to teach these children how to play "leap frog." Why, I will say to my distinguished friend that I can teach them, and I will not charge $18,000 a year to show these little children how to play. It seems to me a huge lot of money to devote to such a purpose.

Mr. PARSONS. I object to the gentleman making a speech in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have ten minutes to show what he wants to do with this $18,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman from New York may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. I do not need the ten minutes unless the gentleman from Tennessee is going to make my speech. [Laughter.] Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. ADAIR. Is it not a fact that out of this fund the kindergarten teachers are employed, and also instructors in athletics?

Mr. PARSONS. It is, to some extent. Of course the very small children have to have teachers, as I understand, to enable the great number of them to make the best use of the small spaces for playgrounds. As far as the athletic instructors are concerned, that again is necessary for supervision, for manly behavior, and to see that the weak boys do not overdo, and that they take the exercise that is necessary to develop them.

There has been an interesting experience here. They have a standard for athletics, a standard maintained by the Public Schools Athletic League of New York City, and each year they have a tournament to find out how many children come up to that standard. Of course the increase shows the physical benefits that come from these playgrounds. The increase has been something tremendous; I think it is something like 200 per cent each year.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOULDEN. I would like to ask my colleague what the experience of other cities is, if he knows, as to playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. There are over 100 cities which maintain playgrounds. I understand that some other Members will describe the experience of their own cities. As my colleague knows, we, in New York, are tremendously handicapped from the fact that where we most need the playgrounds it is most expensive to get them. Some years ago we started the policy of using the areaways around the public schools as playgrounds. The movement started in order that the areaways around the schools should be used not simply by the scholars during the recesses, but by them during the afternoons and during the summer vacation time. Unfortunately many of them were covered. Of course, for proper utilization, we had to have teachers. In the vicinity of New York I think we now have 531 teachers engaged in connection with these schools and their playgrounds.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PARSONS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How does New York maintain its playgrounds—by taxation or private contribution?

Mr. PARSONS. By taxation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I have observed in the papers that various cities in the United States are maintaining playgrounds by means of taxation. Now, can the gentleman inform the House if there is anything in the law now governing the District of Columbia that would prevent the citizens of Washington from placing a local tax on themselves for the purpose of maintaining playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. I understand that the only tax we could have would be a tax as a result of this appropriation bill. Am I not correct?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does the gentleman know whether there is any statute in force to prevent the citizens from imposing a tax on themselves to maintain playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. Absolutely none. This is the only way we can provide any tax to be assessed on the citizens of Washington.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PARSONS. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the gentleman to state that on some playgrounds there were 600 children assembled on 1 acre?

Mr. PARSONS. That is my opinion.

Mr. SIMS. I am not questioning the fact. What I want to ask is, Does the gentleman from New York think that it is in the interest of good health and proper sanitation to assemble as many as 600 children promiscuously on 1 acre of ground to play or for any other purpose?

Mr. PARSONS. I should prefer that it would not be necessary, but you have to do the best you can with what you have. The children come there, and what are you going to do—turn them away? The best way is to have money to get teachers to supervise and see that they all have a chance.

Mr. SIMS. But is not it injurious and liable to spread contagious disease to assemble 600 children on 1 acre of ground?

Mr. PARSONS. It is not so bad as to assemble that many children in one school.

Mr. SIMS. But that is necessary in order to educate them.

Mr. PARSONS. This is education, too; physical and moral education.

Mr. SIMS. I understand there are 18 playgrounds now connected with the school buildings. How many school buildings are there that have not playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman from Tennessee probably knows better than I do.

Mr. SIMS. There are over 100 school buildings, and the scheme is to go on until we have a playground for each public school.

Mr. PARSONS. I do not know that, although I hope that is the scheme.

But that has not anything to do with this amendment. This amendment provides simply for maintenance and use of the playgrounds we now have.

Mr. SIMS. To pay the salaries of teachers?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Is it not a fact that one-half of the disbursements last year was for salaries?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. So that when we have gotten more than a hundred schools, as well as the municipal, the appropriation will be $100,000 a year instead of $15,000 a year?

Mr. PARSONS. I do not think that argument follows, because the attendance on the municipal playgrounds, which are only thirteen in number, is one-third greater than the attendance on all of the school playgrounds, which amounts to eighteen, so the expense for the school playgrounds is much less.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Does this District of Columbia pay one-half of this appropriation?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes; the District of Columbia will pay one-half of this appropriation.

Mr. BRODHEAD. So that of this $15,000 only $7,500 comes out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Is it not a fact that Washington already has more parks and playgrounds for the children than any other city in the United States, in proportion to the population?

Mr. PARSONS. No; it has not.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. What other cities have as much?

Mr. PARSONS. I do not exactly know, but——

Mr. MANN. Why, my district in Chicago would have twenty acres to one to that in Washington.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Of playgrounds or parks?

Mr. MANN. Parks and playgrounds, either one.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Is it not a fact that under the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, the amount proposed to be appropriated, $15,000, would go, instead of to the benefit of the children, to a lot of paid teachers, and the children would not get the benefit of any fresh air and playgrounds?

Mr. PARSONS. You can not use the playgrounds unless you have teachers to supervise these children. That has been the experience of every city in the country that maintains playgrounds. I just stated that that was our experience in New York, and, as a matter of fact, if you have the teachers to supervise the playgrounds you have more children there. In New York it has been discovered that even where there are vacant places adjoining the smaller playgrounds, the children will go to the smaller playgrounds where there is a teacher rather than to the vacant place, because in the vacant place the large boys will come and monopolize it and there will be no chance for the great mass of children, especially for the girls and smaller children and weaker boys.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Does the gentleman think it a fair comparison to compare the conditions in the city of Washington with the conditions in the city of New York, in view of the fact that New York is much more densely populated and thickly crowded than Washington?

Mr. PARSONS. That is true; but the reason I mention New York is because some of our experience in New York is applicable here. Our difficulty in New York is this, that we were behindhand in providing for playgrounds, and know the difficulties that confront us. Our anxiety is that the District of Columbia shall be up-to-date and foresighted about the matter.

Mr. HAMLIN. How many playgrounds are being provided for?

Mr. PARSONS. Not any. The playgrounds have already been provided for. We appropriated two years ago $75,000 with which to buy playgrounds. All my amendment seeks to do is to provide the money to make good use of the playgrounds we already have.

Mr. HAMLIN. What items enter into the making up of this expenditure?

Mr. PARSONS. You have to have a certain amount of equipment, and then you have to have teachers to supervise the children in the playgrounds.

Mr. SABATH. And to maintain the playgrounds in good condition.

Mr. PARSONS. And to maintain them.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman in his idea of the equipment of these playgrounds conceive that they should be equipped for the children or the adults?

Mr. PARSONS. For the children.

Mr. BOWERS. Then how does the gentleman support that proposition of the playground people presented to the committee of turning one of the playgrounds in Washington in the northeast section, I may say—without being certain of the location, and if it is challenged I will turn to the RECORD and make it more specific—into a general establishment for the benefit of all of the people of the District, including a very elaborate bathing plant?

Mr. PARSONS. As I read the hearings of the committee, the proposition of the people in the District was that provision might also be made so that late in the afternoon and in the evening some of the playgrounds could be used by adults. My amendment has nothing to do with that.

Mr. BOWERS. But the gentleman's amendment, if it is adopted, will be used toward the maintenance of these grounds for the very purpose that I have stated, unless people who advocate this proposition have misstated the reasons for which they desire the appropriation.

Mr. PARSONS. My amendment will not further the plan the gentleman speaks of any more than the provision now in the bill will.

Mr. BOWERS. But the provision now in the bill, with its limited amount, will make it absolutely certain that no such misuse—if I may use that term, and I confess that I would regard it as a misuse—will be made.

Mr. PARSONS. Let me say in reply to the gentleman, that in appropriating for the children of the District it does not seem to me that we should give an absolutely insufficient appropriation for fear that a sufficient one might be used for some other purpose when experience shows——

Mr. BOWERS. It is a matter of confessed purpose in the premises.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman refer me to a statement by the commissioners in the hearings which states that?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know that I can refer now to the statement of the commissioners, but I am able to refer, and will do it in a moment, if the gentleman will indulge me, to the statements of those who advocated this particular proposition and were interrogated by me with reference to it.

Mr. PARSONS. Oh, well, they advocated a great many other things.

Mr. BOWERS. If I may further interrupt the gentleman, they have advocated so many things that they have put this committee, and I fear the House, in the situation of the fellow from Tennessee who wanted to join the church, and when they had interrogated him about a number of nonessentials and had asked him whether he believed that the Hebrew children had passed through the fiery furnace, whether he believed that Christ had walked on the waters, and had interrogated him pretty generally on the matter of miracles, they finally asked him if he believed that Jonah had swallowed the whale; and, after a little hesitation, and being very anxious to join the church, he accepted that proposition also. They then passed from the matter of nonessentials to essentials, and inquired of him if he believed that Jesus Christ had died to save all men, and his reply was that he believed he died to save everybody except Bill Smith. [Laughter.]

The inquiry was then put to him why Bill was exempted from the general plan of salvation, and he rejoined for manifest reasons: First, because Bill was so ornery that nobody wanted to save him; and second, because if that attempt was made it would be entirely useless, because no amount of saving grace could reach Bill Smith. After having discussed that matter thoroughly with the proposed applicant they said to him:

We are very sorry, but unless you can subscribe to this doctrine you can not come inside.

And he, having his blood up a little in the premises, said:

Well, I don't believe it, and since you put me on my mettle, I don't believe that big fish tale, either.

[Laughter.]

That is the attitude in which the advocates of this matter perhaps have got the committee, and I fear the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell the House who taught the little children how to roll eggs back of the White House?

Mr. PARSONS. Who teaches them?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. They go and roll eggs back of the White House, some of the eggs break and some do not; but nobody cries about it. Who taught those children how to go down there and play?

Mr. PARSONS. I do not know; the amendment does not cover it.

Mr. SABATH. They have seen it done.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That shows the farcical nature of the proposition which the gentleman is trying to get adopted by the committee, however honest and sincere he is in it. Nature teaches children how to play.

Mr. PARSONS. Let me say this in regard to nature: The experience of the cities tells us what nature in cities does with children. Now, the experience of cities is that for the health and well-being of the children such playgrounds are necessary, and it is necessary that they should be supervised. That is what nature teaches about children in cities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I move the following amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, and ask that it be read at the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment to the amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by substituting for the words "fifteen thousand" the words "seven thousand dollars."

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I would not for a moment be put in the position of denying the children of this District playgrounds or anything of the sort, but it does seem to me that after the committee has given this matter consideration, a jump from $1,500 to $15,000 is a considerable step for the House to take without more information than it has. Furthermore, after what we have heard here, since the consideration of this District bill began, about the condition of taxation in the District of Columbia, I for one am glad to hear from the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] that the citizens of this town are willing and do tax themselves something for the maintenance of these playgrounds. I do believe that a just means can be found between the recommendation of the committee and that of the original amendment. So I offer this amendment in the hope that the citizens will contribute something toward this thoroughly worthy object out of their own pockets.

Mr. CAULFIELD, Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, and Mr. PETERS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, the child without a playground is the parent of the man without a job. Playgrounds in our cities have come to be considered part of our public educational systems, and to-day are becoming universally recognized as such.

I have heard this discussion, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to add a word which I believe will be pertinent, and which brings in the experience of the city where I live, and which shows at that place the success of the playgrounds for the children. The city of Boston is the pioneer city in connection with this form of public education. The first public gymnasium was started in 1886 in the city of Boston, and at that place was provided the first of the sand gardens for the children. From such small beginnings the city to-day maintains for its children 196 acres of playgrounds.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Do you provide teachers and attendants there in the playgrounds for the children?

Mr. PETERS. I am very glad to try and say what we are doing. We do.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Do you do that?

Mr. PETERS. We do. Those 196 acres are scattered in 52 playgrounds. They cost our city nearly $4,000,000 to construct, and there is no question to-day, Mr. Chairman, but they are regarded by every man as an important part of the children's life, and in no small way help to develop from our children men and women with vigorous bodies and healthy minds. Last year the city of Boston appropriated $83,000 for the use of these playgrounds, providing additional apparatus and providing instructors. The use and the necessity of an instructor for these children is well recognized and necessary, for the reasons that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] has just stated. A supervisor keeps the older children from crowding out the younger ones, teaches the younger children various sports, and enables the children to secure from the opportunities of the playground the greatest benefit. The playground has become so well recognized as a part of children's education that during this last year the matter was brought up before the legislature of Massachusetts and a special act was passed, the passage of which I think is very significant as showing the general recognition of the playgrounds theory in Massachusetts, a part of the country where it first was started and where to-day it is in most general use.

This act provides that it should be submitted for acceptance to every city of over 10,000 inhabitants. It provides that the city which accepts the act shall provide a playground for the children, and for every additional 20,000 inhabitants above 10,000 shall provide an additional playground. And in regard to instructors for these, I will read just one section of the act.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman advocate in a country town with a population as small as 10,000 people the setting aside of a playground for children that can play anywhere on the face of the earth in that town?

Mr. PETERS. Why, sir, that is not the question before this House.

Mr. BOWERS. But it is a part of the gentleman's recital of the excellent progress of this most admirable system of playgrounds.

Mr. PETERS. Certainly. Washington has many times ten thousand, and I think the question of whether the children need playgrounds is one that could be fairly submitted to the people, and one which is submitted to the people in this act of Massachusetts.

In reply to the question as to the necessity for supervisors, the act which I referred to says:

Acts of 1908, chapter 513, section 2:
"The cities and towns may appoint, and determine the compensation of, the qualified supervisor of each playground, who shall direct the sports and exercises thereon."

This act, Mr. Chairman, was submitted to 23 cities in the municipal elections in Massachusetts this last December, and of those 23 cities—after full discussion in the newspapers, after the broadest kind of study of the problem—22 voted to accept this provision, only one city failing to do so, and that city by a vote which was practically a tie vote and on the ground that the city was already heavily indebted.

Of the people who passed on this question in Massachusetts over 125,000 voted in favor of accepting the provisions of this act and slightly over 23,000 voted in opposition to it.

Mr. SIMS. The cities paid all the expense, did they not? The State of Massachusetts did not pay it.

Mr. PETERS. The cities paid it, and each city for itself voted whether that particular city should adopt that particular act. It is now being put in operation, commencing the 1st of January, in these 22 cities. And I want to say to the gentleman that in the city of Boston the playgrounds to-day are not standing still, but are increasing in general use, and the public opinion there, after a practical demonstration of the question, absolutely supports the theory of playgrounds as an essential part of our school system. I hope here we may meet our responsibility to the people of Washington by adopting this as a part of our educational system. [Applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am the last man in the House or out of it who would deny a child the opportunity to play. We have more parks in the city of Washington than any city of which I have any knowledge, and I want to say that I have traveled considerably through the United States. The parks are conveniently located. They are all over the city. About each and every one of these parks is a splendid policeman who keeps it in order, and who keeps the big boy off the little ones and vice versa, for sometimes the little boy jumps on the big ones.

Mr. Chairman, it is an utter absurdity to talk about starting this thing of having a wilderness of teachers in the city of Washington to teach a child how to play "leap frog" and how to swing in one of those swinging machines, or how to ride in a merry-go-round or how to play "horse," as I used to do from the time I was big enough for my little legs to straddle a fence rail.

Mr. MANN. Who provides all this play machinery in our parks?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I presume Uncle Sam does.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no. That is what this provision is sought for. The gentleman thinks the children do not need to be taught to play, but they do not have the things to play on. That is the trouble.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Suppose "play" machinery is necessary for children. Are there not a thousand and one other things that the people of the United States are appealing to this Congress to provide; and are they not answered with the chorus, "A deficit in the Treasury?" Why shall we go along here and in hundreds of small matters pay out the people's tax money, fritter it away, putting a little spigot here in the Treasury and a little spigot yonder in the Treasury, which will continue to pour out the people's tax money into the highways and byways of the city of Washington and elsewhere in the United States?

Is there never to be any retrenchment or reform in paying out public money? Is every little whim and caprice of the school-teachers of this country to be humored? I have been a school-teacher myself, and I deeply sympathize with them, and want to aid them within fair and reasonable lines. I regret that I have not had in my life more school-teachers than I had an opportunity to have; but nobody taught me how to play or plow. No one taught one man in this House how to entertain himself at school, or upon the farm, or in the city where he was reared. He taught himself.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it would have greatly improved him if he had learned how to play, instead of taking everything so seriously all the time?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, not when I ought to be serious, and I think this is one of the times. The gentleman says teachers are wanted to police the little children. Now, the policing proposition is useless; you all know that. You can not get 600 children on an acre of ground and allow them to play anything. That is an absurdity.

And when you come seriously to look at the question, I do not believe that you need any machinery. Here is the beautiful greensward out here about the White House. There is Jackson Square; there is Lincoln Park; there is Rock Creek Park.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does not the gentleman know that the children can not play, as children ought to play, in Jackson Square, or McPherson Square, or Franklin Square, and that the Carnegie library has spoiled that square as a playground?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Carnegie libraries spoil a great many things, in my estimation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In all those places there are signs that say, "Keep off the grass." Last summer, one hot day, I saw boys in the streets playing where the Carnegie library stands usurping what ought to be left for playgrounds.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What are the parks for?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I am only stating the facts as they exist.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that argues there are too many policemen, and you are calling for money to get more.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know that children can not play on the Capitol grounds, that they can not play on the Mall, that they can not play on the grounds around any public building in Washington, and that the only place the Government freely provides, outside of the playgrounds, are the streets, and there is a law against that which is being enforced at times.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. VREELAND. Congress has already provided 14 municipal playgrounds and 18 grounds around schoolhouses for small children to play in, besides all the great system of public parks where perhaps games can not be played.

Mr. MANN. Where if you get on the grass you are warned off.

Mr. VREELAND. Yes; in the municipal parks.

Mr. MANN. In the other parks.

Mr. GILLETT. I would like to ask the gentleman where these municipal playgrounds are?

Mr. VREELAND. I will read them later when I come to address the House.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman from Tennessee is not objecting to grounds being provided for?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; we have the grounds.

Mr. ADAIR. It is simply to the provision for teachers?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes. Who teaches the little lamb how to play on the sunny hillside? [Laughter.] Why, nature. Nature, who taught all of our children and that nature which teaches us now that we are grown men.

Mr. PARSONS. Let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he objects to the kindergarten teachers in the public schools?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know; I do not suppose I am opposed to that. I am in favor of all schools that are useful, and I am for more children and fewer poodle dogs. [Laughter.] The next thing you know you will be asked to appropriate for and provide playgrounds for the "poodles" that have entered into society. [Laughter.]

Let us not run away with the people's money. If this thing should be done, that is one proposition; but I say that you do not need to police the grounds or need teachers to teach children how to play. Why, gentlemen, I have discovered so much of the policing of public grounds—as the gentleman from Illinois has said, we are so surrounded by the police, that you can not step on the grass anywhere. These parks were made for breathing places. I have seen hundreds of little children in Jackson Park and I have seen them in Lincoln Park, and there there was no keeping off the grass. There are various other parks around here, in the very heart of the city, which are intended for the people of this District, young and old, to go there and get the fresh air and pump it into their lungs and revitalize and invigorate their bodies, and I object to taking this money and going out and employing a wilderness of teachers to teach the boy how to play. I am opposed to "sissyizing" our boys. That chloroforms his genius and his character.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] is a lawyer, and let him think of the number of turntable lawsuits where children have been hurt by the turntable. They naturally want to see something go round, something whirl. But here you come in and say we must employ a wilderness of teachers to go out and teach the children how to run their little carts, how to play mumblepeg, how to play leapfrog and bullfrog, roll the hoop, and all these other things that is in the little one's heart the moment that he or she strikes an open place, and which comes just as natural as it does for them to breathe.

Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that the city of Washington gets enough of God's fresh breath here by the use of the public grounds, as the result of the tax money of this country. Why do you have playgrounds here and do not have them elsewhere?

Mr. PARSONS. What does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why do not you go out in Arizona? I knew the gentleman would think he would tempt me with that, but the Government has complete jurisdiction in the Territories. Why do not you go elsewhere; why do not you go up in Alaska and teach the Eskimo how to play?

Mr. MANN. We are doing it at a great expense, and the gentleman votes for it all the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to ask the gentleman if he indorses that?

Mr. MANN. Sure.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that may do for the savage.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact that in the greater part of Arizona any children who may be there have plenty of play room, much more than in the city of Washington?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes, they have it; but they do not have any teachers or anybody to teach them how to play. Did anybody teach the gentleman from Pennsylvania how to play?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; that was natural. Give me the playground, and I will be able to play.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly; but we have them all over the city, and also Rock Creek Park. You might as well say have somebody teach fish how to swim as to teach children how to play.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, it is very easy for a Member to rise in his seat to belittle this amendment. It is always easy to stand as a friend of the people; to bewail the extravagant expenditure of money. So the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] found it very easy to urge the committee to vote against this amendment because, really, this great Republic could not afford to let the people of the District use $15,000 during the next fiscal year to maintain playgrounds for the children of Washington. He stood aghast at the thought of the employment of teachers—I have forgotten the gentleman's expression as to numbers.

Mr. PARSONS. "A wilderness."

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; that was his expression. He is worried at the thought of "a wilderness" of teachers being employed in connection with the supervision of these playgrounds. I confess I never saw a wilderness of teachers, and so I am not as deeply disturbed as is he. He probably used the word "wilderness" in the sense in which we find it used in the Scriptures—to indicate a desert—and he warns the representatives of the American people against the employment of a desert of teachers. Then, too, he does not approve of supervision. He fears that this means teaching the children to play, and he assures us that he was never taught how to play. To be sure, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] asked him if he was in favor of kindergartens, he was forced to say that he supposed he was. But what is the kindergarten? As the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] suggests, it is the system by which the child is taken from its mother's knee and taught to play as the beginning of its education.

What is the proposition before us? Two years ago we appropriated $75,000 with which to purchase playgrounds for the children of Washington. In addition to the grounds thus provided for there are a goodly number of municipal grounds around the public school buildings. A year ago we appropriated $1,500 with which to equip and maintain these grounds. It was found that this would not begin to do the work, and between $15,000 and $18,000 was raised by private subscription and through the contribution of the children themselves and through the kindly aid of the gracious lady in the White House. This money was expended in equipping and maintaining these playgrounds. Again the Committee on Appropriations provides in the pending bill for $1,500 for the maintenance of these grounds during the next fiscal year. The purpose of this amendment is to provide an appropriation adequate for this work. The question, Shall the people of the Capital City of the Nation have the advantage of these playgrounds for which we appropriated $75,000 two years ago or shall we set apart the niggardly sum of $1,500 and say, with the gentleman from Tennessee, that we are facing a deficit and can not afford to do more?

I believe in economy. I believe that this year is a good time to practice economy; but I do not believe in beginning with the children of Washington, who are entirely dependent upon us for all school privileges. It was reported this morning that the Committee on Naval Affairs will ask us to appropriate $30,000,000 for the construction of two great battle ships. Yet when it comes to a question of properly maintaining these playgrounds we are told that we can not afford it. And, mind you, every dollar of the $30,000,000 for those two battle ships will come out of the United States Treasury, while this paltry sum of $15,000, which the people of Washington desire to have appropriated, strictly speaking, will come out of the taxes raised by the people of Washington.

It is their own money, raised by taxation for their municipal purposes. Of course it is true that the National Government is a taxpayer in the District of Columbia, and I for one do not believe that it pays any more than its fair proportion of the taxes. The people of the country will feel, I am sure, that the gentleman from Tennessee was not fortunate in selecting the point at which he would start upon his career of economy. They desire to see their Capital City a model city. They desire to see its schools model schools. They desire to see its children cared for, so far as the public is concerned, in a model way. We have the playgrounds already—about 32 of them.

Mr. PARSONS. Thirteen municipal and 18 school grounds.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; to be exact we have 31 of these playgrounds. Now, shall we provide the necessary equipment? Shall we maintain them? Shall we provide that supervision which experience everywhere has shown is necessary? Shall we, by appropriating $15,000, secure to the children of Washington such privileges of playgrounds as are enjoyed in other large cities?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Yes; certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. When the gentleman says that Congress two years ago appropriated $75,000 for playgrounds in the city of Washington, I would like to inquire if that was for the purchase of real estate or for paraphernalia?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. It was for the purchase of real estate. Seventy-five thousand dollars was appropriated for the purchase of playgrounds.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman tell us, if he can, how much real estate that amount of money actually purchased for the purpose of playgrounds?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I can not give the gentleman the information he desires. Very likely the chairman of the subcommittee, who has the bill in charge, can tell just what property was purchased.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Just one more question, whether or not that was the first time that the Government of the United States entered upon the policy of purchasing playgrounds for children in the city of Washington? Had it been going on prior to that?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, as I am informed and believe, this was the first time that the Government appropriated money for the purchase of playgrounds. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] asks why not start the scheme out in Arizona. But the gentleman should know that the Congress has entire control over everything connected with the municipal government of the city of Washington, and that no such condition exists between the National Government and the Territory of Arizona. The Territory has its own government. It raises its own taxes. It has full authority to maintain its playgrounds wherever needed.

But we are responsible for conditions in the city of Washington. Some of our friends are afraid of extravagance in the employment of men and women in connection with the supervision of these playgrounds. But supervision is absolutely necessary. You never see a crowd of grown ups at a ball game but you find policemen there. On these playgrounds we want baseball grounds, and football grounds, and tennis courts, and other instrumentalities for healthful outdoor life and exercise. Then, in order that all these things may be enjoyed to the uttermost by the children, we must have adequate supervision. So, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment increasing the appropriation for maintaining the playgrounds from $1,500 to $15,000. I repeat that, to all intents and purposes, it comes out of the taxes raised by the people of the District. The people of the District want this appropriation, and the appropriation will meet with the approval of the good people throughout the land. We are voting for the children when we vote for this appropriation. If, after voting for this appropriation, any of the members of the committee feel conscience stricken on the ground of extravagance, if they will come to me I will join hands with them and help to make the appropriation for battle ships $15,000,000 instead of $30,000,000, thus providing one battle ship instead of two. By doing this we shall practice actual economy, not as to the treasury of the District of Columbia, but as to the Treasury of the United States, where the deficit to which the gentleman from Tennessee so feelingly referred exists. Vote for the amendment, and if you have any question as to the wisdom of your course, come to Washington next July and go over the playgrounds and see the healthy enjoyment they afford to the little people of the District, and next year $15,000 will be appropriated without debate for the purposes of our playgrounds.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a few words as to the position of the committee on this question and as to the reasons which have governed it in making this appropriation. The appropriation carried in this bill for maintenance and salaries in connection with the playground system, which includes the swimming pools down on the flats, is $4,550. One thousand five hundred dollars is for maintenance of playgrounds, and $3,050 for salaries and equipment in relation to the bathing pools, and we are informed that both these are included in one system. The question that is before the committee for discussion is not whether we will have playgrounds for the children of Washington. That policy has already been entered upon. A large number of playgrounds have already been provided. As I have stated before, there are now 14 municipal playgrounds—those are the figures furnished to us by those having it in charge—now in existence in this city where children can play. They can be divided up——

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman said 14 had been provided by Congress. Does he mean that?

Mr. VREELAND. I do not think all of them were provided by Congress. Congress has appropriated $75,000 or $100,000 in cash and, if I recollect right, has turned over some land, which is now being used for a playground system. At any rate, the city of Washington now has 14 municipal playgrounds. It is so well provided with them within the city limits that they are now starting playgrounds outside the city limits, out in the District of Columbia, which is as much country as almost any region beyond it in the State of Maryland. Besides that, we have 18 playgrounds around these schoolhouses. Now, we recognize that these are not playgrounds where baseball and football can be played, but they are playgrounds where the small children can play, away from the rough sports of the larger boys. They are all used for that purpose. Application came in this year for 6 additional playgrounds around the schoolhouses of this city.

It is the intention of the committee to provide the schoolhouses of the city with these smaller playgrounds for small children, but owing to the state of the Treasury this year and other reasons, it was thought best to pass this appropriation over for another year. Now, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York passes this committee, it will not add a foot to the ground where the children of Washington can play; it will merely provide for a corps of attendants who are to take charge of their sports, who are to teach them the games which American boys for a hundred years have taught themselves. Now, that I may not be accused of exaggeration in saying this would provide for a swarm of attendants, I want to give some information of the number employed last year. The chairman of the Playgrounds Association, Mr. Rudolph, was asked the question, How much money raised last year went for the salaries of these attendants—these people who stand around and superintend the sports of these boys and girls—and he said that, without having the actual figures, he would say there were about 100 people employed, at an average salary of $40 per month. Thus we are embarking upon an undertaking, not to provide additional playgrounds. That policy has already been entered upon by the House; that policy has the sanction and approval of this committee, and appropriations will be brought in in the future by this committee as the needs of the city and the city's finances permit.

Mr. STANLEY. Will the gentleman permit? Does this appropriation of $18,000 provide for attendants in addition to the 100 already provided for that purpose?

Mr. VREELAND. It will not only include the attendance of the 100 who are already employed, but enlarge the number.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. What was the amount of the appropriation last year for that purpose?

Mr. VREELAND. The amount of the appropriation last year for this purpose of playgrounds was $1,500. Then, in addition, we provided several thousand dollars for the bathing pool as part of the playgrounds system.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I did not understand the statement of the gentleman just now that there are 100 employees at $40 a month employed out of the appropriation for last year. That would be——

Mr. VREELAND. Why, the people of Washington last year had a little chance to show their civic pride and their energy——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be granted ten minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would like to ask my colleague how much money was spent last year, including our appropriation and that made up by citizens.

Mr. VREELAND. Well, there was something like eighteen or nineteen thousand dollars, I believe, spent on the playgrounds.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Spent in maintenance?

Mr. VREELAND. Something like eighteen or nineteen thousand dollars.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I would like to ask my colleague how 100 people at $40 a month, making $4,000 a month, could be retained throughout the year on $18,000.

Mr. VREELAND. Well, I was reading from the statement of Mr. Rudolph, the president of the Playgrounds Association. Of course these people are not employed throughout the year. I do not believe they are employed in January, February, or March; but during the months they were employed there were 100 people who received, according to the statement of the president of the Playgrounds Association, an average of $40 a month.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Does that mean 100 people employed at the same time or 100 different people employed during the course of the year?

Mr. VREELAND. The president of the Playgrounds Association says [reading]:

> Without having the actual figures here I should say there were 100 people employed and their average salary was $40 a month.

Of course, they are not employed during the whole year. I suppose these playgrounds are not in use now, and these men are not employed now to take charge of football or baseball, but during the portion of the year when they were employed that is the number and that is the amount they received.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman stated just now that the people of Washington had an opportunity to show their civic pride, and just at that time he was interrupted.

Mr. VREELAND. I was about to state that it has always seemed to me that the citizens of this beautiful capital lack more in civic pride than the people of any other city in the United States. It seems to me—perhaps I am unjust in saying it—that the energy which in other cities, through business associations, goes to the building of the city, to all the things to which they devote their enterprise, is here turned into the channel of securing appropriations from the Treasury.

I think I am safe in saying that the property in the city of Washington pays less than half the taxes that is paid in any other city in the United States. The tax rate here is 1½ per cent, but the property on which it is taxed is not assessed probably on the average over 35 or 38 per cent. Hence gentlemen can see that the rate of taxation in this city is probably one-half that of any other large city in the country, and yet there is no city in the United States where the people do so little for themselves as they do in this city of Washington.

Why, to-day there are some 65 cities in the United States that maintain these playgrounds associations, the land for which has been purchased by the public-spirited citizens of those cities, and the amounts necessary to maintain them is annually raised by the citizens. But here in Washington, after one or two years of effort, after having safely got the movement started, they fall back upon the National Treasury to keep it going. I say to you, gentlemen, that you are starting in here upon a course of appropriation which, if acceded to, means hundreds of thousands of dollars in the next few years. Do the gentlemen think I am exaggerating in making that statement? Why, the sum of $247,000 is asked for this year in this very appropriation bill that is presented to this committee.

Mr. PARSONS. For maintenance?

Mr. VREELAND. For the playgrounds movement.

Mr. PARSONS. For maintenance?

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman's amendment is all for maintenance.

Mr. PARSONS. I inquired how much is asked for maintenance?

Mr. VREELAND. It includes the purchase of additional playgrounds, it includes the maintenance, it includes new swimming pools, and we are notified that as the next step upon one of these playgrounds, called the "Rosedale playground," they are to ask us for a municipal gymnasium costing $48,000, in which are to be put shower baths and tubs, and not only the children are to be invited to use them, but the grown people of the city are to be invited to go there and use them. That opens up a prospect for a great number of attendants to take care of these people and keep the tubs clean and to keep the people in order. As soon as that is presented, some other portion of the city will say, "Where is our municipal gymnasium?" and that must be provided for. So the never-ending demand on the Treasury keeps up.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. The amendment that I have offered relates, does it not, simply to the maintenance and use of the playgrounds that we already have embarked upon?

Mr. VREELAND. There is no question about that. It has been brought out often enough. The gentleman desires to relieve the people of the city of Washington from providing its own attendants that they had last year to supervise the games of the children. A year ago in our appropriation bill we put in $1,500 for furnishing the utensils and implements with which the children are to play. We put in that appropriation to complete, $1,500. Does that mean that the appropriation was dropped and that they have stopped asking for it? Not at all. That means simply that they have started an appropriation which is to go on forever and a day. Now, gentlemen, this committee is not opposed to playgrounds for children. This movement started some ten or fifteen years ago in Germany, in the densely built up cities thereof, where they have no playgrounds for the children, no chance for them to get a breath of fresh air. Properly they started movements there to lay aside tracts where the children could go and play. It was then taken up in this country.

I can understand why gentlemen like my friends from New York [Mr. BENNET and Mr. PARSONS], living, as they do, in the great metropolis, viewing the conditions which exist there, may overestimate the necessity for making large appropriations for these playgrounds in the city of Washington. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is no more comparison between New York and Washington as to the necessity of these great open spaces than there is between Washington and Alexandria. Washington is nothing but a great country town. Fifty-nine per cent of all the territory in this city is devoted to public purposes, either parks or streets or circles or something accessible to the public. Just think of it! Fifty-nine per cent and more devoted to that purpose. Go down to the city of New York, with its teeming millions, start in down at the Battery, and you will find crowded streets where even grown people are hardly safe on the sidewalks—a small island bounded on both sides by deep water. There is not a place in that city, scarcely, where a child is safe outside of his mother's sight until you get up to Fifty-ninth street, to the beginning of the park system.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will my colleague yield for just one correction?

Mr. VREELAND. Yes.

Mr. BENNET of New York. South of Fifty-ninth street there are at least 12 parks.

Mr. VREELAND. Oh, there are some little parks down there, but what I say is that I know of no city in the United States which is as little in need of municipal playgrounds as the city of Washington. Why, it is all a great playground.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman specify just what parks in Washington are adapted for use by the children of Washington as playgrounds? I was informed a little while ago by a Member of this House that one of his children was roller skating in one of the parks and was stopped by the police, and that even that could not be permitted here.

Mr. VREELAND. We have already gone over that time and again. Every gentleman knows from his own experience that children play throughout this whole city. You can go down tonight after we adjourn, down on Pennsylvania avenue, the principal street of Washington, and you will meet dozens of children roller skating on the very sidewalks along which we pass. All over this city are wide streets with very little travel upon them, shady trees where thousands of children enjoy themselves playing, using them for roller skating and other similar purposes. Now, as fast as is consistent with the state of the Public Treasury we are providing great spaces here where the larger boys can go away by themselves, where they can play games of baseball and football and other games which they love; but where the committee call a halt and where they wish this Committee of the Whole to call a halt is on the building up here of a great plan under which hundreds of people are to be employed in taking care of these grounds, in supervising, as they call it, the play of these children. I say it is a good chance for the public spirit of the city of Washington to show itself. Sixty-five cities to-day are raising their own money to provide the necessary maintenance and equipment and whatever supervision is necessary for the care of grounds. Why can not Washington, for which the National Government does so much, show a little of this spirit which is shown in 65 other cities of the United States?

The time of Mr. VREELAND having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.

Mr. VREELAND. Now, Mr. Chairman, the committee has sought in this matter to pursue a middle course, to pursue a moderate course. We do not agree with the extremists in either case. We do not agree with those who say that it is not necessary to provide any playgrounds in the city of Washington where the children may play. We say they should be provided as fast as is consistent with prudence and with the condition of the Treasury. Neither do we go to the other extreme represented by the gentlemen from New York, where their views are fostered, as I believe, under totally different conditions; while they do not seem to appreciate the difference between New York, with its four millions of population, and this great beautiful city, with 59 per cent of its total area open to the public. I say we are pursuing a middle course and a moderate course.

We are making such appropriations as ought to be made and as are consistent with the state of the Treasury. Why, the gentleman from Massachusetts tells us that this movement was born in Boston ten or twelve years ago. Mr. Chairman, it may be that the movement was born in Boston, but it was born many more years ago than ten or twelve. I maintain that education of these boys of the rising generation should not so much teach them the use of these tools and implements, which they say the teachers show them how to use, as to teach them self-reliance—the development of the ability to take care of themselves; it means to make them independent of outside help. But I do not believe that this course is best followed by having some one stand at the elbow from the time they leave the cradle until they apply for some public job in a department.

Mr. Chairman, I say that this movement started in the city of Boston not ten years ago, but it started at a much earlier date, during the Revolutionary times. The old Boston Common is a historic ground which was provided for the use of the people of Boston and the boys of Boston when this country commenced.

I remember when I was a boy reading some of the history of the city of Boston. I remember reading of the time when the city of Boston was in possession of the British during the Revolutionary war. Lord Howe was in command of that city. History tells us that one morning Lord Howe was informed that there was a delegation of boys who desired to talk with him. He asked that the little fellows be shown in, and in marched five young lads 12 or 13 years old. The spokesman told Lord Howe that their rights had been interfered with by his soldiers; that their right to use the Common, their right to have their sleds in the street and on the Common of the city of Boston, had been interfered with by his soldiers; and then they wanted to know if it was with his knowledge and by his order. They said that unless he took some means to restrain them they would take measures of retaliation. Lord Howe gazed with admiration on those boys and said to them that orders would be issued to prevent his soldiers from interfering further with their sport, and the boys went out. Lord Howe said that it was useless to talk of conquering a country that raised up such boys as those.

I submit, gentlemen, that we are not raising such boys as the city of Boston raised them during Revolutionary times, by supervising every act, not only at home, not only at school, but even when they go out to play, and having hundreds of attendants standing at their elbows to tell them what they must or must not do. [Applause.]

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to have been forgotten in this debate that a large portion of the money will be raised by the city of Washington or the District of Columbia anyway, one-half of the appropriation being raised by them, and in addition to that the additional amount of money, whatever it may be, that is necessary to take care of the grounds. I am heartily in favor of this amendment. The modern system of education provides largely for the education of children, not only in the school, but on the playgrounds, in the kindergarten, and lower grades. In the public school system of to-day much of the teaching is done by instruction in games and on playgrounds, and in the courses of study in almost all of our normal schools to-day there is provision made for the teaching of teachers how to teach the children to play. There is also a series of text-books published giving information and instruction along those lines. I believe that it is a wise provision to give such instruction and that it should be continued and that we should go ahead and give assistance asked for here. Then, if it is necessary to economize in our expenditures, I would begin somewhere else than on our educational system [applause] and not begin on this system, especially intended for the benefit of the children.

Besides this, in this city of Washington we have in a portion of it as largely a congested population as you have anywhere in this country, and it is among the laboring classes in the city of Washington that this congestion is greatest. It has long been a maxim "A sound mind in a healthy body." Many of the rising generation of this city will be day laborers, and as far as possible the health of that next generation should be provided for. Give an opportunity for the children to play and proper and legitimate instruction, no matter what it may cost, and many of those who otherwise might grow up cripples will grow up strong and be able to take care of themselves. If this amendment was for thirty thousand instead of fifteen I would vote for it just as willingly, and I would vote for it in the city of Washington or anywhere else. I am in favor of instruction, whether in the schoolroom or on the playground.

In all courses of study, in all schools, in all our universities, people are employed to teach the children how to play, and in our universities some of the highest priced men are those who teach our boys how to contest in baseball, football, and rowing, and other athletic sports. We all justify that. I see no reason why this amendment should not be adopted. I do not censure the committee at all for their action, because of the pressing need of economy, but in considering that, we are too apt to lose sight of the fact that in legislating for the city of Washington we are legislating for a State, and we must provide here for all of the things that our States provide for at home. In every one of our States provision is made for this very thing all the way down the line, even to the kindergarten schools, and I am heartily in favor of it. [Applause.]

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I doubt very much whether either this body or the country at large will justify the proposition which has just been submitted by my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. MURPHY], that the highest paid professors in the education of the youth should be those who devote their attention to the development of football and baseball. Whether I am right or wrong on that particular proposition, I have no hesitation in pledging the constituency which I represent on this floor as dissenting from that idea, and I think that my friend from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] was equally unfortunate in his advocacy of this particular proposition when he ridiculed the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] for his use of the term "a wilderness of teachers." The gentleman from Vermont called attention to the fact that this House had made large appropriations in the matter of playgrounds, and that is true; and this House has made large appropriations in the matter of the administration of those playgrounds. Some years ago the House was betrayed into appropriating a sum of something like $10,000 for the administration and control and the policing, so to speak, of these grounds.

Do I enlighten my friend from Vermont when I advise him that 30 per cent of that whole appropriation went to the gentleman who called that matter first to the attention of Congress in the shape of a salary as general superintendent of playgrounds? I may be mistaken, but my recollection is that when the provision on this subject was passed in the last District appropriation bill it carried in terms the words, "for completing equipment of playgrounds," and it carried it because the committee and the House were jealous of the use that might be made of a general and large appropriation in that regard. Those words were introduced into that bill because it was the desire of the law-making body to impress upon those charged with the administration of this fund the fact that the sum of money which was carried by that bill meant the completion of the equipment of this project. What answer do we hear to that? The amendment which is introduced by the gentleman from New York does not go, as I understand it, to the matter of equipment. It goes to the matter of administration.

Mr. PARSONS. I understand by the word "maintenance," that that means renewal of equipment as well as salaries for taking care of the grounds and supervising the children.

Mr. BOWERS. It means renewal of equipment? Does the gentleman pretend that the equipment within one short year has become so antiquated, so destroyed, so used, that this fund, ten times the amount which is recommended by the committee, and I do not remember how many times, but quite a number of times, the amount which was reported by this committee one year ago for the completion of this equipment, is now necessary to renew and restore it? Or does the gentleman confess, as must be confessed from a consideration of the hearing, that a large part of the sum which is now asked from Congress and which has been expended out of the contribution which the citizens have made in the administration of the playgrounds, to which I will come in a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. As I understand, the appropriations made at the last session of Congress were two, one for $1,500, just the same appropriation that the committee has provided for this year.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. PARSONS. And the other was for $500, to be used for a specific purpose, to put in order a part of the playgrounds.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman disagree with me on the proposition that the last appropriation bill carried with it the words "for the completion of the equipment of these grounds?"

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman may read the bill, if he has it.

Mr. MANN. What difference does it make?

Mr. BOWERS. I have not the bill before me, and I am compelled to state from recollection, but I have no hesitation in saying that my recollection is correct and that the amount carried in the last bill on this proposition was for the "completion" of the equipment. Now, I may be wrong about it, but nobody seems to be challenging it, and I see some gentlemen looking at the last law on this subject.

Mr. MANN. Oh, we will know the facts soon, if the gentleman does not seem to know.

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, I will talk long enough for my friend from Illinois to read the old bill, and knowing his habits of care as I do, I know he will check me up to the last degree, and I am not a little bit afraid of the result. [Laughter]

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BOWERS. I thank my friend from New York for confirming my recollection.

Mr. PARSONS. I read from the last bill:

> Playgrounds: For completing equipment of outdoor playgrounds, $1,500.
> For grading and planting of hedges, trees, and other improvements at Rosedale site, $5,000.

Mr. BOWERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, at the last session of Congress we appropriated $1,500 for the completion of this equipment. Has it grown obsolete in twelve months? Has it worn out in twelve months? Is it dead in twelve months? What have my friends to say in response to the suggestion that I made a moment ago in reply to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER], that 30 per cent of the original appropriation made by Congress in this regard went to the salary of one particular official? There is something more. I live in the country. I belong to that fortunate or unfortunate class which the leading exponent of this particular playgrounds system referred to in a lecture, as I am advised, on a night not so long past. When the inquiry was put to him as to why this playground system in the city of Washington did not receive greater support, he replied that, unfortunately, there were five members of the subcommittee who lived in the country. [Laughter.] I want to exempt from that particular criticism one of the most efficient and valuable members of the subcommittee on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, Mr. MADDEN, who lives "in the heart of the wilds of Chicago." But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, living as I do, in the country, I have never seen more space open to those who want to play than there is in the part of the city of Washington in which my own lot has been cast. We are told here that this matter of administration needs a large number of teachers. My own idea is—it may be right and it may be wrong—but my own judgment is that young America had best be educated as young America has been educated, and that it would be a step in a backward direction if you deprive the small boy of the inalienable right to go up against the big boy and learn how. [Applause.] If there is anything that contributes to the manliness of the youth of this country, it is the disposition on the part of these young men to withstand the oppression, dictation, and domination of those who may be their superior, either in size or in years, and to exercise and demand and, as far as my experience and recollection goes, to get by reason of the very team action and team play that the advocates of this proposition exploit so much the things that they want at the expense of the bigger, stronger, and domineering boy.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, when this question first came before the Committee on Appropriations I was in full sympathy with the view which is taken by the committee to-day; but, differing from the rest of the committee, I have changed my mind, and I believe that it is because I have investigated the question and have advanced, and the rest of the committee have not, whereas, of course their opinion is just the reverse. I quite sympathize with the argument just made by the gentleman. I grew up in the country, and when this question first came before us I said it was absurd to buy playgrounds and to have supervisors over the children. As he said, I thought it was good that the small boy should run up against the big boy. In the country, where there is plenty of room, and where they know each other, there is fair play, and the boys will insist upon it, and all have an equal chance; but I have come to believe that in a big city, where there are gangs of toughs and hoodlums—I believe that it is necessary that the city provide playgrounds for them, and that in order to make those playgrounds effective, you must have somebody to look after both the small boys and the big boys, and particularly to guard the girls and the small children, and therefore I have changed my original belief, and I think that we ought to provide in the city of Washington playgrounds, and if we are going to provide them, we ought also to maintain and supervise them. Why, the gentleman said that Washington had 51 per cent of streets, and he thinks children ought to play in the streets. I do not believe paved streets in a big city are any place to play. Congress has already admitted that by providing playgrounds, so that the question now is, Shall we make these playgrounds useless or useful? Last year the citizens of Washington—whom the gentleman criticises so much—and the children themselves raised $16,000 to carry on the playgrounds and make them useful, and now the question is, Shall the Congress, shall the District itself, maintain them, or shall we leave them to the private contributions of the city of Washington? I believe that the experience of this country proves that we ought to adopt this amendment.

I believe that inasmuch as all the cities that have tried this playground system have gone on and continued it, we ought not to imagine that we know better than the teachings of experience. All over the country the large cities have recognized the necessity of playgrounds, and where they have them they recognize that it is necessary to have somebody to supervise the play. Why, you say you are teaching them to play. Of course if you put out a few children and they have plenty of space to themselves they do not need any teachers. They learn themselves. But when you have a playground which is open to all the children of all ages, you have to have somebody to arrange who shall have different parts of the grounds, what aged children shall be here and what there, and when you have little children you have got to have sand piles for them and somebody to supervise them. Lately, I understand, there have been three cities which did not have supervision where they had to shut up the playgrounds because they found they were doing more harm than good to the children. They find that supervision is necessary, and it seems to me that for us to stand up and assume that because we did not need it in our childhood, living, as I presume most of us did, fortunately, in the country, because we did not need supervision of our sports, it does not follow that in this age of great cities and of congested streets we can apply our experience to the conditions of to-day. We can afford to be liberal; we can not afford to be niggardly in anything which promotes the healthy development of children on whom depends the whole future of the country.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As I understand it, the gentleman stated they had to have sand piles?

Mr. GILLETT. The small children have piles of sand in which to play.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And you are going to haul sand to make sand piles over these playgrounds?

Mr. GILLETT. Why, yes; the small children have got to have something of that sort.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, underlying the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] is a proposition of government bigger than the question of whether we shall spend $15,000 more of the people's money or not. I, perhaps, stand alone in this House in my political philosophy—a philosophy that I might say is only represented by Herbert Spencer, who is dead, and myself, who am more or less anæmic; but notwithstanding this minority position I have felt the subject of sufficient importance to present what I believe to be the opposite view to that presented by the proponents of these amendments. Spencer suggests this question as a dominant one that should engage the mind of every politician, using that unfortunate word in its higher and purer sense:

What type of social structure am I tending to produce?

That is the proposition that I think should concern this House. What type of social structure are we tending to produce by legislating as proposed? I am city bred, born in the heart of a large city about the size of Washington. My experience as a child, therefore, is of city conditions and of city conditions somewhat congested. When I am told that it is necessary to supervise the play of children in order to enable them to play, I am told something that is in direct conflict with my experience as a child. When I am told that it is necessary to prevent the big boys from overrunning the small boys, I recall how, as a small boy, I organized enough small boys to whip the big boys. And it is that tendency, it is that self-development, that taking care of one's self which has been a marked characteristic of American boys and American men, and which has served to make the fiber, the moral backbone, of this great Nation.

I do not want to see it undermined by a pampering system imported from abroad. I am perfectly willing to vote to create open-air spaces where they are necessary. I am even willing, in the interest of the child and of the poor, to go a step beyond where my judgment might lead me and supply equipment for play, but when I am told that it is necessary to employ instructors at a higher rate than we pay those who teach the mind of a child, to superintend their play, and that otherwise playgrounds are useless, I am unable to agree and am unwilling to vote the money. We have in my city playgrounds. The statement was made in the playgrounds association bulletin, and there is a very aggressive and forceful group of people pushing this project, that in some cities the playgrounds had to be closed because of a failure to supervise them, and it was claimed that this was true in the city of Louisville. I made some inquiry. If it be so, I was unable to find it out. It certainly escaped the knowledge of myself and those others to whom I spoke.

Now, every argument made here to-day has been a begging of the question. There has been the statement that in this city it has been done and found profitable, and therefore in this other city it should be done, and therefore in this the Capital of the Nation. And the very argument illustrates the danger of this kind of legislation. Once create an official class, whose life is dependent upon the continuation of a particular governmental policy, and you turn every energy of that class to a continuance and enlargement of that policy. There is not a person employed by this Playground Association to-day who is not an advocate spending a large part of his time in trying to promote this scheme. The great mass of the public are unorganized. When you oppose to an unorganized body a few insistent organized people, the result is always in favor of the organization. As a result of this persistent advocacy of this question, we have had an extension of the work based on efforts of its friends rather than on its merits.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is what has happened in this particular instance. Why, in the last week we have had people here giving lectures in regard to this matter to influence the action of Congress, presenting but one side of the case; and doing this, why? Because every one of them, with a very few exceptions, are themselves beneficiaries of the system they desire to promote. Yet, upon their statement, we are expected to continue and enlarge. I will join the gentleman from New York, if it becomes necessary, to create more air space here. But there is not a city, in my recollection of the cities of this country—and I have been in most of them of any size—that has more ground, open-air space, and pure air than the city of Washington. It is not simply because of the houses and grounds and buildings, but it is also because of the purposes to which the houses are put. There are practically no manufactories in the District of Columbia. There is no contamination of the air. There is no need for open spaces in order to enable the people to get out where they can breathe fresh air, which would be the condition in places like Chicago and New York; and yet, notwithstanding that fact, there has been a warfare concentrated here at the Nation's capital. If we act, what is the result? They go to some other city. "Why," they say, "the United States Government has inaugurated this policy in the District of Columbia, and therefore you must inaugurate it;" and each step is made the basis for another step.

In conclusion, let me again say: As one bred in a city, who took some part as a small boy—some rather rough part as a small boy in that city—I want to protest against the idea that it is necessary to appoint teachers to teach children to play and take care of them while they are playing. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I sympathize with a good deal that the gentleman from Kentucky has stated. I do not believe in the lobbying system which is used in so many cases, and probably in this case. But, Mr. Chairman, after all we are confronted with the proposition as to what we shall do. Last year this House passed a bill prohibiting children of the District of Columbia from working, and now it is suggested by the gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations that we shall not even permit them to play.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest, let them play, in order to make their play work—not supervise them.

Mr. MANN. I would not call that a question, although I am always glad to yield to my friend from Kentucky. There is no place in Washington to play, unless some place is provided; there is nothing to play with, unless something is provided. The gentleman from Kentucky may imagine the children can play without teaching. They can not. The young children, without meeting with the older children, will never know anything in regard to it; not one of them. They learn from meeting with the older children; and you can not play without something to play with. Can they provide swings, can they provide any of the mechanical implements now provided for children playing in the private homes in Washington? No. Now, it has been argued by gentlemen in favor——

Mr. SHERLEY. Does my friend think it is necessary to have a teacher to teach children to swing?

Mr. MANN. It is absolutely necessary to teach children to swing, for somebody, some older person, one who has already learned how to swing, to teach the child to swing properly.

Mr. MACON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; I will always permit the gentleman from Arkansas to interrupt me.

Mr. MACON. What I want to ask the gentleman is this: Who taught the first child to swing? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Well, I desire to say that so far as my knowledge has been Adam never learned to swing.

Mr. MACON. Who taught the first child to swing?

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested that these playgrounds are only provided in cities of dense population; and it is because of that suggestion, made so often here to-day and so often before in the House, I take the floor now. I represent a district in no part of it to any extent as thickly populated as the districts in the city of Washington. I think there is no place in my district where the population is so dense as it is on an average in the city of Washington.

It is a district wholly metropolitan, in the sense of being in the city limits of the city of Chicago. We have in my district about 1,200 acres of parks and playgrounds. We have 10 parks used for playgrounds, and last year in these playgrounds, not all in my district, but all on the south side in the city of Chicago, and a large share of them in my district—many in the districts represented by the gentlemen from Chicago [Mr. WILSON and Mr. MCDERMOTT]—we have 148 free tennis courts, 24 free baseball diamonds, 25 football grounds, 1,723 booths in free bathing pools, 114 shower baths for men, 118 shower baths for women. They have bicycle tracks and various other things. Now, are these made use of?

[The time of Mr. MANN having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. BENNET of New York, it was extended ten minutes.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the south side, in the city of Chicago, in a district not as thickly populated as Washington, in these playgrounds last year 279,000 and odd people made use of the indoor gymnasium, 900,000 people made use of the shower baths, 2,164,000 people made use of the outdoor gymnasium, 654,000 made use of the swimming pool, 135,000 made use of the assembly halls and various other provisions, and a total of 5,195,500 people made use of these different provisions.

Mr. VREELAND. You do not mean people. You mean visits by an unknown number of people?

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I mean that this is the number of times that people made use of these provisions, and I do not include mere visitors who looked on or those who came with their children. I include only those who actually made use of the various facilities.

Mr. VREELAND. The point I wish to bring out is that instead of being 5,000,000 people who visited these baths, or whatever they were, it may have been 100,000 people who visited them a great many times.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I use the common language of statisticians. If the gentleman does not understand that, I will be glad to explain it.

Mr. VREELAND. I do not think the gentleman is trying to deceive the committee.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, has this proved a benefit, or not? Following the provision originally for the playgrounds there, the people paying all the taxes themselves, they have insisted that playgrounds should be provided where they are needed in other parts of that territory, and only recently three new playgrounds have been laid out in three different parts of my district, in not one of which is there a tributary population to the extent of 10,000 persons.

Is it necessary to provide these playgrounds? Oh, well, I suppose that children would live, most of them, if they had no playgrounds. Most of them would live for a time at least if they were all raised in flat buildings, although the buildings around these playgrounds in the main are not flat buildings.

Mr. VREELAND, Mr. BOWERS, and Mr. COX of Indiana rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. To either charmer.

Mr. BOWERS. The gentleman speaks of the payment of taxes. Will the gentleman insist that the proportion of taxes paid by the residents of this District is absolutely equitable under the circumstances?

Mr. MANN. Oh, if the gentleman raises the question whether the Government of the United States should pay half the expenses of the District of Columbia out of the General Treasury, I do not propose to discuss that question, although I am inclined to think that it is a perfectly fair division.

Mr. BOWERS. But the gentleman seems to lay special stress on the proposition that the taxes were paid by the people and that they demanded this particular thing. Now, will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to the fact that in this theoretical distribution of the burden, in order to saddle one-half of the burden on the Government, it is necessary to charge the Government with the ownership of all of the streets, of all of the open spaces, of all of the parks, of all of the public utilities, of all of the things necessary to the life of any municipality that are exempt from taxation everywhere else in the world, except in so far as they are estimated as the property of the United States in the matter of the fiscal system of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman never has and never will hear me shirk my position as to whether the Government ought to pay one-half of the taxes of the District. I have been familiar with the hypocrisy of that statement for years.

Mr. VREELAND. The gentleman's discussion seems to be largely along the line of the necessity of providing playgrounds, and he cites the city of Chicago as an instance. The question before the committee is whether the increased appropriation shall be made for supervision and employees and maintenance of playgrounds, which means at least 100 teachers for supervision and attending the children. I would be glad to hear the gentleman discuss and give us the experience of the city of Chicago, as to whether there is a necessity, after adopting the policy of providing playgrounds, having provided 14 municipal playgrounds already, whether this large amount of money is necessary for the supervision of those playgrounds?

Mr. MANN. I will read the gentleman my opinion on that subject:

Educators, social workers, playgrounds supervisors and directors are all agreed that a playground system without a definite plan of operation is little better than no playgrounds. The plan of operation, however, can be no better or larger than those who are intrusted to execute the plans. Nowhere has it been found enough to furnish space and equipment and leave the use of these to the people without expert supervision. This seems to be true, even where the space and equipment have been selected with the most careful reference to the play instincts and tendencies of the groups of varying ages.

A public playground system is peculiarly an institution wherein a great deal or a very little efficient work may be done with the general appearances being the same in either case. Hence the necessity for careful selection of playground workers, study of hours of work in relation to efficiency, and a plan of schooling which shall insure growth of vision, resourcefulness, and strength on the part of those who plan and execute the work. Good results of a positive character can only be secured when all of these factors are considered and acted upon wisely. Therefore frequent conferences are held among the instructors, study courses are followed, and special investigations are conducted with reference to making the workers and playground system more efficient and more useful to the community.

Mr. Chairman, I was at one time in charge of a gymnasium myself as expert director. It would be folly to tell me that a man can go into a gymnasium and through his own knowledge there treat himself physically or learn the things that he wishes to learn. No man of good judgment will take a treatment or practice in a gymnasium without expert direction, and no set of children can profitably and to the best advantage use the implements that are provided for them to play without expert direction. Do we give expert direction to our children at home? Certainly, we attempt to. I have kept house in the city of Washington for a number of years, with one boy who is past the age of living here. There never has been a time or a place in Washington where he could properly play. Time and again has he complained to me because policemen warned them off the parks, because policemen warned them off the sidewalks, because policemen warned them off the streets. Where would he play, he used to say—"Where can we play?"

Mr. VREELAND. Play what?

Mr. MANN. Anything.

Mr. BOWERS. Did the gentleman's boy attempt to play on the sidewalk, or did he go to the gymnasium in the school in which his boy and my boy were both pupils and both members of the same athletic association?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's boy and my boy did not confine themselves to either place. But they ought to be permitted to have some place where they can go and play. Why, gentlemen of the committee, talk about economy, as has the gentleman from Tennessee. We propose to expend fifteen or twenty million dollars for the purpose of building battle ships to kill people, and then refuse to expend $15,000 to save the lives of our children. [Applause.] I am willing to practice economy at the proper time and the proper place, but for God's sake commence economy on somebody else besides the children of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania was recognized.

Mr. VREELAND. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VREELAND. Is it proper at this time to make a motion to close debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is in order at any time, but the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VREELAND. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania withhold a moment until I can make a motion to close debate? I move that all debate on this paragraph and amendment thereto be closed in twenty-five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor, unless he yields.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I decline to yield, Mr. Chairman. With a great deal of the position taken by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] I agree, particularly with that portion relative to the supervision. I do not, however, believe that the proposition before the House at this time involves the question of supervision.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman permit an inquiry?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. We can easily determine that by inquiring of the proposer whether he would be willing to accept an amendment limiting the money to equipment.

Mr. MANN. And will the gentleman be willing to accept the proposition if he accepts that?

Mr. BOWERS. If you limit it to a reasonable amount; yes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. As I understand this proposition, it has very little to do with supervision. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that supervision is not of so much importance, that children should have playgrounds where they can exert their own individual rights without the intervention or supervision of others; but in our city conditions large numbers of children congregate on the playgrounds, and it is not a question of supervision to the extent of directing the children how and what they shall play, but a question of supervision to the extent of permitting each of the children that may be there to exercise his own individual rights to play, and to that extent I believe in supervision.

The conditions in our city life are considerably different from the conditions in our country life. I was raised in the country, unlike the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. There we have conditions that are more nearly natural than we have in the cities, and under natural conditions give the child the time to play and he will find his own implements for play and his own method of play; but in our city life it is different. We have artificial conditions. The natural conditions for playing that exist in the country do not exist in the city, and even when you have provided the playground there is not the same natural condition for play and for physical development that goes with that play that you have in your country life. It becomes necessary to do something more than to provide playgrounds. We have, as I understand it, already provided the playgrounds. Now, it is necessary for us to do more, and that is to provide the means of utilizing those playgrounds with the implements necessary to play with, and the proposition of the committee is that it provide for maintenance and equipment of those playgrounds the paltry sum of $1,500, and we are asked to economize to that extent because of the great expenditure on the part of the Government; and, incidentally, it is asserted that the people of the District of Columbia do not pay all of the taxes as they pay in other cities. As a matter of fact we are the parties who are responsible for the system of taxation in the District of Columbia, and if the system of taxation is not just, is not equitable, then we should remedy that system and make it just and make it equitable; but we should not use it as a means and a weapon of preventing the proper equipment of playgrounds for the people in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BOWERS. Do the people of the District want the system changed? Would they like to have universal suffrage?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Some of them would and some of them would not.

Mr. VREELAND. I want to know if the gentleman knew that in the last year's appropriation the people representing this movement asked for $1,500 for implements for children to play with, on the representation that that was sufficient to equip them? Now they come back, and we are giving them another $1,500 for the same purpose.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. As a matter of fact, however, the information is in the hands of the committee to the effect that $1,500 provided last year for that purpose was not sufficient, and that the citizens of this city contributed out of their own purses some $16,000 or $18,000 for that purpose.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman be willing to confine his advocacy and his activities to the matter of equipping these grounds, without reference to the maintenance of these grounds by some teacher who will tell the boy whether he shall shoot from taw or from past?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I am perfectly willing to confine my activities in this matter to an argument in favor of the maintenance and equipment of the playgrounds, with a supervision that will not permit the supervisor to determine what particular play the boy shall engage in.

Mr. BOWERS. And the gentleman's proposition is as deep as a well and as broad as a church door.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, debate on this subject has been quite general. It seems to me nearly every phase has been traversed, and I move that all debate upon the paragraph and pending amendments thereto close in fifteen minutes.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman consent that the time shall be equally divided between those in favor of the amendment and those in favor of the provision as carried in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair will state that that can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. VREELAND. There are two members of the subcommittee who have not been heard.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I will extend the time to twenty minutes.

Mr. PARSONS. I ask unanimous consent that the twenty minutes be divided equally between the two sides.

Mr. VREELAND. I object to that, as there are several members of the subcommittee who have not spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that that will naturally be done by the Chair. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan that debate on the pending paragraph and on amendments thereto close in twenty minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have been a Member of this body for ten years, and never during my experience here have I witnessed as much misapprehension with reference to the facts pertinent to the subject-matter under discussion. Time and time again here have we heard Members exclaim, "If we fail to act, where shall the children play?" One gentleman suggests that the city is covered with signs of "Keep off the grass." Another gentleman says that the public parks and all other reservations are closed to the children. Another says that the police officials are driving the children from all public squares, circles, and triangles, and that they have, in fact, no place to play. Now, what are the facts? Why, instead of all these assertions being correct, the exact contrary is the truth. Not only have the children of the District of Columbia the right to play in public parks and other reservations, but the law specifically directs that the officer in charge of these public parks and reservations shall lay out thereon playgrounds for the children.

Now, Mr. Chairman, does any gentleman here question the statement I have made? If he does, I have the law before me and can read it in substantiation of my assertion. But, gentlemen, that is not the issue. We are not discussing now the proposition as to whether the children of the District shall have playgrounds; that issue is not involved in the amendment of the gentleman from New York. The question now being considered is, Shall we swell this appropriation for maintenance and supervision of playgrounds already provided from $1,500 to $15,000? Now, Mr. Chairman, the inquiry naturally arises, and it is quite pertinent, What will be done with this $15,000 if we adopt the proposed amendment and vote it into this bill? Mr. Chairman, I have always thought that a safe rule to govern our conduct upon a given proposition is to look to the past and, seeing what has happened, let it serve as a guide as to what will take place in the future. Now, let us see what has been done with the money heretofore appropriated for the purposes contemplated in the amendment of the gentleman from New York. Let me show you. Mr. Chairman, the first appropriation for this purpose by the Congress was three years ago, and the item carried $2,000 for maintenance and equipment of playgrounds. Note that it was for maintenance and equipment.

And yet, Mr. Chairman $700 of this sum was diverted from the purpose for which it was appropriated and used for supervision, for the payment of salaries of these so-called "teachers," who have been so frequently alluded to. They are not teachers in any sense of the word, as I shall show before I conclude. Seven hundred dollars of the sum appropriated for maintenance and equipment was used, not for that purpose, but for supervision. The next appropriation——

Mr. PARSONS. If the gentleman will permit, you say the appropriation two years ago was $2,000.

Mr. BURLESON. No; the first appropriation, three years ago, was for $2,000. I know what I am talking about, and I beg to assure my friend that every statement I shall make is literally founded upon fact. The next appropriation—or the second—was for $10,000; and here it was that these gentlemen, these professional philanthropists—and I do not like to impute bad motives to people, especially for deeds apparently good; but, Mr. Chairman, the interest manifested here in the lengthy discussion of this comparatively trivial item on this bill makes it manifest that there is a propaganda behind it, an active combination of persons pressing it. This interest has manifested itself, as the gentleman from Kentucky has said, through the columns of the local press. These persons are trying to promote the success of this particular scheme or fad, have lectured and written and petitioned, in order to make an impression upon the minds of Congressmen, with a view of securing this appropriation provided in this amendment.

If they succeed, it is one step toward what they hope will ultimately lead, if they can have their way, to the expenditure of a million dollars by the District and General Government for the acquisition of playgrounds in this city. But to return, the second appropriation secured was, as I have said, for $10,000 for maintenance, supervision, and equipment of playgrounds. The next and third was $5,000 for maintenance, supervision, and equipment, the three aggregating $17,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, what became of the money? These people are now asking for $15,000. Before we give it let us see what became of the $17,000. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois asks, with tears in his voice, if not in his eyes, "Will you practice economy at the expense of our children?" And he appeals to this body not to deny the children this pitiful sum. Well, I am not inclined to deny the children of Washington any sum which can and will be used for their benefit. But, Mr. Chairman, I am inclined to shut off the people who have been the beneficiaries of these appropriations heretofore made for these purposes. How much do you suppose the children, the poor children that the gentleman from Illinois wails about, got of this $17,000? How much of it went for maintenance and equipment? How much of it went for playthings? Permit me to give you the figures taken from the record. Of the $17,000, $10,369.77 went in the way of salaries to these people who are lecturing and writing and petitioning in support of this——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may have time to conclude his remarks.

Mr. PARSONS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The temporary occupant of the chair has informed the Chairman that the time for debate on this proposition has been limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. BOWERS. If the Chair rules that the request is out of order, I ask that the gentleman's time may be extended for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. That would consume the entire twenty minutes.

Mr. BOWERS. A request for unanimous consent is always in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi, as the Chair understands, asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for ten minutes, the time not to come out of the time of twenty minutes.

Mr. BOWERS. That is my request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, of these first three appropriations made, as I have just said, $10,369.77 went for supervision, to those who drew salaries as supervisors. Oh, Mr. Chairman, it would be too bad to deny the children a continuation of these appropriations! Remember, gentlemen, conditions are entirely different in the city of Washington from those obtaining in the city of New York or the city of Chicago or any other city in the United States. There are no conditions of congestion here, no vast areas covered by sky scrapers like those to be found in New York or Chicago. Yet, notwithstanding this, these interested philanthropists were not deterred from coming forward with their plans for reaching into the Treasury. After the first two appropriations had been secured their plans began to develop.

It was then, under the persuasive presentation of these gentlemen, who had been largely the beneficiaries of this $17,000, that their scheme developed and was laid before the Committee on Appropriations, disclosing the fact that they ultimately intended to ask for playgrounds covering the entire area of this city and calling for, as I have shown, an ultimate expenditure, approximately, of $1,000,000. If they succeed, what would become the annual fixed charge on this Government and the District? How much would it then take? If it took $10,369, out of an appropriation of $17,000, to supervise a few playgrounds, how much would our constituents have to go down into their pockets and put into the coffers of this District in order to meet the requirements of these gentlemen who hoped to supervise a vast number of playgrounds? How much? How much?

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] confuses this item, which he seeks to amend, with an item that was stricken out of the bill. This item in the estimate carried originally $25,000 for the supervision, maintenance, and equipment of these playgrounds—municipal playgrounds—and on page 117 of the original draft of this bill we found there was an estimate of $8,400 and also $1,500 for supervision, equipment, and maintenance of school playgrounds. This was for the summer months. We struck it out. There is a difference between the municipal playgrounds and the school playgrounds. There has arisen a controversy in this city between those who want to control all the playgrounds and the local school authorities. Both want to control the school playgrounds.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman kindly say to what appropriation he is alluding when he says there was a separate appropriation for the school playgrounds?

Mr. BURLESON. I did not say appropriation. I said estimate. Look at your Book of Estimates and you will find it.

Mr. PARSONS. But under this appropriation all this money could go for the school playgrounds as well as the municipal playgrounds, could it not?

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, I do not know. In the light of the fact that a former appropriation for this purpose has been diverted, I doubt not that they could use it or would try to use it for just such purposes as they saw fit. But under the item playgrounds, where we have provided for the municipal playgrounds heretofore, if I may so term them, was this estimate of $25,000, and it is this estimate that we cut down to $1,500. Why? Because, after your committee, going into the matter carefully, reached the deliberate conclusion that no larger sum should be appropriated, the House passed upon and approved this sum, namely, $1,500 last year. You decided last year that these playgrounds could be equipped for this sum, and the item was embodied in last year's bill and passed by you and is now a law, appropriating $1,500 "for completing the equipment of outdoor playgrounds."

Now, is it possible that a larger sum is needed? Take the figures that I have given, appropriations for the three years, and say that every dollar not used for supervision was used for equipment. Ten thousand, in round figures, was eaten up by the supervisors. This would leave $7,000 of the first three appropriations for equipment, and then add $1,500 appropriated last year, which would make $8,500 used for equipment. Now, Mr. Chairman, shall we, as suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS], appropriate $15,000 to renew an equipment that originally cost only $8,500 and has been used for only one or two years? That is the position that these gentlemen have placed themselves in, and they can not possibly escape it. Mr. Chairman, there is no disposition on the part of any member of your committee to deny any child in the District of Columbia an opportunity to play, but your committee does feel that the trend of such appropriations like this contended for by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS] is paternalistic and socialistic and should not be encouraged. In this District we provide not only free schools, but free text-books, free writing paper, free ink, free pens, and also free sewing materials to be used in the sewing schools. In fact, the entire equipment of the public schools is furnished free.

Everything is free from the time a child enters the kindergarten up to the time he graduates from the business high school. And these gentlemen of socialistic leanings, not content with this, now come and say you must keep the leading strings on the child, not alone in the school but even when he is on the playground. I ask the question that I asked last year when we were discussing this same item: In God's name, will some one tell me where the lesson of self-reliance is to be learned by a child in the District of Columbia? You keep the spoon of governmental pap in his mouth from the time he enters the kindergarten until he graduates a man, and if you take this step now, and coddle him and supervise him and direct him and manage him when he is on the playground, where is he to learn the lesson of self-reliance that makes for sturdy Americanism and self-reliant American citizenship?

Mr. Chairman, one word more and I am done. The District of Columbia contains more open squares, more public reservations for breathing places than any other city in the world. The engineer commissioner estimates 51 per cent of the entire city is devoted to such purposes. The gentleman from New York said a moment ago that it is 59 per cent. Last year I had a letter from the engineer commissioner——

Mr. VREELAND. Fifty-nine per cent. I read from the estimate made in the letter you refer to.

Mr. BURLESON. I am mistaken, and I beg the pardon of the gentleman. I had written a letter to the engineer commissioner, asking him how much open space have we in Washington that can be used for playgrounds, and he figured that 59 per cent of the entire area is probably used for public purposes.

Mr. GILLETT. Does the gentleman think that the streets are proper places for children to play?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT (continuing). For it applies to the streets.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; the streets are a proper place for children to play in the residential portion of this city. I lived on New Hampshire avenue and N street NW. for five years. I had small children who played on that street. I lived on the corner of Seventeenth and N streets NW., one block from Scott Circle and Massachusetts avenue, for four years, and all the children played on the streets. Mr. Chairman, why not? There is not one vehicle that will pass along those streets in an hour. There is no reason why they should not play on the streets.

Gentlemen, the sole purpose of this amendment is to obtain a foothold. I do not like to criticise the people of this District—I know some good people are interested in this appropriation—but why should we now, the very first time that a spirit of charity or public spirit manifests itself on the part of the District people, chill it by saying to them by such appropriation as is asked here, "You shall not do anything for yourselves?"

The gentleman from New York and the proponents of this proposition say that the people of Washington have come forward and generously raised fifteen or sixteen thousand dollars to be used for the playgrounds. It is the first evidence of civic pride that I have seen manifest itself since I have been in Washington. The wellwishers of these good people should hesitate a long time before they discourage its development. Let us permit it to grow, rather than promptly take the step which would suppress it. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, how many minutes are there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes are remaining, five minutes to be occupied by those opposed to the amendment and ten minutes by those in favor.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I dislike to occupy any time in a discussion of this amendment, and yet it is due to say that the subcommittee framing this bill was confronted by the very serious financial condition of the District. As was stated yesterday—and I may say it is not that I would not like the committee to give all that is asked, but the committee has its own limitations. The estimates carried nearly $4,000,000 more than the possible revenue. The law provides that the debt of $4,184,000 shall be paid, beginning with the 1st of July next, in the five ensuing years. That means that this committee, aside from the $975,000 it pays on the funded debt, shall pay $823,000 plus $83,000 interest this year, making over $900,000 on the unfunded debt.

Gentlemen, that was the law that the committee had to face in framing this bill. As your servants, we feel ourselves bound to obey the law and seek to carry out that which you had purposed to do. It has been the intent of the committee not to make any appropriations except where they seemed to be absolutely necessary. They talk about education of childhood. One of the great lessons to be taught in childhood is to pay your honest debts, and the city has made its own agreement with the Federal Government and your committee is called on to carry it out.

Another thing. There is no harmony in carrying out the playground scheme. It is a double-headed institution—a municipal and a school board. To show that I am not mistaken about this let me read what one of the members of the school board says:

> It is, I think, the opinion of the board of directors of the Playgrounds Association, of which I am a member, as well as of the board of education, that these school playgrounds shall be under the sole charge of the board of education. It is public property, and it should be under our charge.

Again—

> The Citizens' Association are of the opinion that it should come directly under the board of education, and they believe it would be better for us, because now it is a divided control and it is unsatisfactory, and the board of education feel that they should have the direction of it.

That it is the property of both the municipal and the school board associations.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest to him that this same person from whose testimony he is reading stated to me since then, and since these hearings have been had by the subcommittee, that there has been a resolution passed by the Citizens' Association stating that they are in entire harmony.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. This same party says that they "have had constant trouble."

Mr. GILLETT. But he says that they have now come to an entire agreement.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is since the hearings. It is the opinion of the committee that no great harm will come if this matter can be held in abeyance. The grounds are equipped as school grounds. The worn-out equipment can be replaced by the appropriation. No great harm can possibly come to the childhood and youth of the District by letting this matter rest in abeyance until those who propose to expend the money shall themselves devise some plan wherein then can work in harmony and get the best results with the money appropriated.

Mr. BOWERS. May I ask my friend who would administer this money if it was appropriated?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The gentleman knows as well as I.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know, I confess, and I ask the gentleman. I do not think he knows.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If I may be allowed to answer, it would be intrusted to the District commissioners, who will appoint a board charged with its expenditure.

Mr. MANN. We can not turn this money over under this provision.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Wait a moment. Where and to whom do they make a report of the money? It must be to the commissioners, if at all.

Mr. GILLETT. How do they get this money? The commissioners have the money, have they not?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am so advised.

Mr. MANN. The commissioners of the District?
Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.
Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman——
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to speak in favor of the amendment?
Mr. NYE. In favor of the amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota.
Mr. NYE. It is certainly impossible for me in the time which I am allowed to say what I should like to say upon this, to me, important question.

In a moment of time this Congress appropriated $800,000 for the sufferers in Italy. Certainly I do not complain of that, although I think in prudence and wisdom we might have limited it to $500,000. But to-day we are spending hours to guard against a possible extravagance in a matter which goes to the very vitals of this Republic, which concerns the tenderest ties of home and the things most sacred to our people.

Three hundred and twenty thousand children took advantage of these grounds last summer under a wise, wholesome, and, I think, proper supervision by those who, in a spirit of philanthropy, sought to improve the conditions of our children. Who will say that these playgrounds and these exercises are not a part of education under our modern system of the development of children? Who will say that it is unnecessary that the thousands of poor children in the city shall have the advantages which these grounds that we have purchased afford under a wise supervision?

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman——
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield?
Mr. NYE. I have not time or I should be glad to.
Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman advise us where he gets his figures as to the 320,000 children?
Mr. NYE. I will. I do not wish to encroach upon the time of the gentleman who has charge of this amendment.
Mr. BOWERS. I think the committee, which is always willing——
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further.
Mr. NYE. I will try to state my authority.
Mr. BOWERS. I was going to say that I think the committee, which is always willing to hear from the gentleman, would gladly extend him time.
Mr. NYE. I hold in my hand a circular published by the Playgrounds Association, which, by the way, as I am informed by its president, is an incorporated association.
Mr. BOWERS. Is the gentleman advised of the fact that the probable population of the city is about 320,000? Does he want to reduce them all to the condition of children?
Mr. NYE. I was about to give the gentleman an answer as to the authority which I have. I stated that this Playgrounds Association was an incorporated body. Its officials are among the best citizens of Washington, and the superintendent and officials have placed in the hands of some Members this circular which states that the aggregate attendance for eleven weeks last summer was 320,000 as against 240,000 for the summer of 1906.
Mr. BOWERS. That is multiplied by every day in the week.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.
Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, in view of the attention that was given to the gentleman from Texas and the interruption of the gentleman from Minnesota, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota have three minutes more, not to come out of the twenty minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota be allowed to proceed for three minutes, not to be taken out of the twenty minutes. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. NYE. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is really parsimony that is manifested by the opposition. I have the utmost confidence and respect for the judgment of this committee. I know that they have acted according to their best judgment, but this amendment is before the committee, and we have a right to give our individual views upon the subject.

Some of us believe that the children of this city should be looked after first. I know the necessity of economy. I believe in it, and in many cases, as a new Member, I have voted contrary to my party and contrary to the majority on various appropriation bills. But we have this property, we have these grounds, and it stands to reason that a decent supervision which shall secure an orderly control of the children and their development should be provided. I think there is no question but what the amount asked for by this amendment is a reasonable one, and I do not think we are making any mistake in supporting the measure. I think we can afford to lean a little toward extravagance, even if it be extravagance, when it comes to dealing with the future of children in the city of Washington. I am aware that I have taken all the time I ought to, and I thank the gentlemen of the committee for the opportunity to say a word. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. How much time is there remaining, Mr. Chairman?
The CHAIRMAN. Five minutes.
Mr. PARSONS. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BEDE].
Mr. BEDE. Mr. Chairman, so far as the financial side of this question is concerned, I do not wish to discuss it, because I think the committee is much more competent to deal with that part of the argument. If this question referred only to Democrats and boll weevils and other products of Texas, I would leave it entirely to the gentleman from Texas. [Laughter.] But as it refers to children—and I have some of those innocent products in my family—I think I have a right to speak.

It depends altogether upon what you think and what you believe about the conduct of children. I never have known a family of 10 or 15 children like my own [laughter] that could be turned out into the nursery without a governess. If there is any man in this House with that sort of a family that he can turn out without a governess, he ought to vote against this appropriation; but if he believes in a governess for the nursery, he ought to give a governess to the playgrounds in this Capital City.

I once had a lady friend who had about 20 children. [Laughter.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.
Mr. PARSONS. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes, not to come out of the twenty minutes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes, not to come out of the twenty minutes. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. BEDE. This lady friend had about 20 children. She was a married woman. [Laughter.] She believed in the administration policy, and her home was by the side of a river. A stranger came by, stopped for a drink at the well, and in talking with the lady of the house expressed the thought that it was a very dangerous place for a family to live that had so many children. The lady said:

Oh, no; it is not so very dangerous; we have only lost 3 within the last twenty years.

[Laughter.]

Now, it depends upon how precious you consider the children whether you want the governess or not. It is not a question of playgrounds; we have appropriated for that. It is a question whether you want to turn loose all the children of the District of Columbia, not to play leap frog, as my good friend from Tennessee has said, but to attack each other in the different games in which they are engaged. My own personal experience in raising 15 or 20 children is that they need a little supervision. We have not got enough secret service men to turn over to that business. [Laughter.] I do not know as they would be competent if we had them. I believe the home life of a nation will stand up for governesses in the home and in the public playground of this great Capital. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, last year $18,000 was expended in connection with the equipment and supervision and maintenance of the playgrounds in the city of Washington, and of that $16,500 was contributed by the people of the city of Washington and only $1,500 from the appropriations. That $18,000, roughly, was expended as follows: For improvements, $5,000; for equipment, $3,000; for supervision, $10,000. My amendment asks that the District assume the burden itself. It may be that there are Members who think from their own experience that supervision is not necessary, but I submit that when an association going out to raise money finds it necessary to expend $10,000 of the $18,000 it can raise in supervision, that is prima facie proof that supervision is necessary. It was called to my attention by a Member of the House who had taught school that every school-teacher in recesses, when the children are playing, is supposed to supervise their play. I just want to read a summary in an article showing the results of an investigation made of juvenile delinquency in Chicago in connection with the effect of playgrounds there, and this is the summary:

To sum up the case for the small parks, the playgrounds in the large parks as well: A small park neighborhood recreation center such as those on the south side of Chicago can be expected to be coincident with a 28½ per cent decrease of delinquency within a radius of one-half mile, conditions of the neighborhood in other respects remaining stable. To provide a probation district with adequate play facilities is coincident with a reduction in delinquency of from 28 per cent to 70 per cent, or 44 per cent as an average. In addition, over a much larger area the small parks have a tendency to decrease delinquency 17 per cent.

I say we need supervision so that all the children can use the playgrounds, and I say that by providing proper facilities and using the playgrounds that we already have in the proper ways we can tremendously decrease the amount of delinquencies.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS] offered an amendment appropriating $7,000. I hope that amendment will be voted down, and that those who are in favor of proper supervision will vote for the amendment I offered, providing for $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, let us have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent that the item as amended, if the amendment were adopted, be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, that will be done.

The Clerk read as follows:

So that the provision will read:
"Playgrounds: For maintenance and renewal of equipment and planting trees for outdoor playgrounds, $15,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GARDNER of Michigan) there were—ayes 69, noes 59.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan and Mr. PARSONS took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 62.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the plans and specifications for all buildings provided for in this act shall be prepared under the supervision of the municipal architect of the District of Columbia and shall be approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and shall be constructed in conformity thereto.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order or reserve it as against this paragraph. The provision for a municipal architect was stricken out of the bill yesterday.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it will be necessary to insert an amendment there, which I will offer.

Mr. MANN. Very well, I shall withdraw the point of order if the gentleman proposes to offer the necessary amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 55, line 13, strike out the words "municipal architect" and insert in lieu thereof the words "inspector of buildings."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOR METROPOLITAN POLICE.

For major and superintendent, $4,000; assistant superintendent, with rank of inspector, $2,500; 3 inspectors, at $1,800 each; 10 captains, at $1,500 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,000; clerk, $1,500; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 4 surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $600 each; additional compensation for 20 privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $4,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary; 12 lieutenants, one of whom shall be harbor master, at $1,320 each; 45 sergeants, one of whom may be detailed for duty in the harbor patrol, at $1,250 each; 482 privates of class 3, at $1,200 each; 89 privates of class 2, at $1,080 each; 88 privates of class 1, at $900 each; for amount required to pay salaries of privates of class 2 who will be promoted to class 3 and privates of class 1 who will be promoted to class 2 during the fiscal year 1910, $7,043.52; 6 telephone operators, at $600 each; 14 janitors, at $600 each; messenger, $700; messenger, $500; major and superintendent, mounted, $240; inspector, mounted, $240; 55 captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; 64 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, on bicycles, at $50 each; 26 drivers, at $720 each; and 2 police matrons, at $600 each; in all, $23,513.52.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, in line 11, strike out the words "five hundred and thirteen" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and fifty-three."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, this is simply to correct a total.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $4,380.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I attempted in a timid way to get the floor before the vote was taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from New York to this bill increasing the appropriation for playgrounds from $1,500 to $15,000, but a motion was made by the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the bill to limit debate to twenty minutes, which cut me off; and hence I take the floor at this time for the purpose of expressing the hope that the gentleman in charge of the bill will see to it that when it is reported to the House a separate vote is demanded upon this amendment and that a roll call is had, so that the taxpayers of the country can see just who of their Representatives upon this floor are voting the money of the children away who live in the north, south, east, and west, or in whatever other part of this Union they may be domiciled, so that those children are to be burdened with extra taxation in order to furnish playgrounds to the city of Washington for the entertainment of the children who happen to reside here. It is true, sir, that it says that the city of Washington is to pay one-half of the amount, but that is not enough. It ought to pay the entire amount if it wants playgrounds, or do without them.

If this matter was intended to stop with this appropriation of $15,000, I would not at this time take up the time of the House to oppose it, but it is only an entering wedge, in my judgment. Mr. Chairman, it has been suggested by gentlemen upon the Appropriations Committee that it is only a beginning of a series of appropriations that will perhaps increase from time to time until a million dollars or more of the people's money will be improperly appropriated under the guise of furnishing playgrounds for the children of this city, but intended by many of its advocates to furnish jobs for quite a number of place hunters who are too lazy to work for a living. In plain words, Mr. Chairman, it is simply an effort on the part of some of the people who are behind this proposition to furnish money wrongfully taken from the pockets of the people in order to give jobs to a horde of persons around the city of Washington who are out of employment and ought to be put to work instead of being sent to some playground to try to teach children how to play.

I asked the gentleman from Illinois, in response to a suggestion of his "that children did not know how to play unless they were taught," who taught the first child how to play, and he responded that he did not think Adam knew how to play. Adam was never a child, as I understand it, and hence it was not necessary to teach him to play. He did not even know how to swing, for if he had I am sure he would not have been tempted by Eve, for he would have swung himself up into the tree and have gotten the apple for himself. [Laughter.]

Seriously, Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that you can not make a child play. You can not make him play any more than you can make a horse drink if he does not want water. You can furnish playgrounds for them, but you can not lead children to them, like you would cattle to a pasture, and make them play; they will not do it. They want to play in their own way and of their own volition. They want to play games of their own selection, and not those suggested by some other person.

Again, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen say children ought not to be allowed to play on the streets. I want to say to you, sir, that it is as natural for children to play on the streets—I do not care how many playgrounds you may have distributed around over the city—as it is for a goat to quit grass and go to the streets of a town and eat tin cans; and just as natural as it is for "Old Suke" to quit a good range and go to a town and eat the paper and rags that she finds strewn along the streets. In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I insist that this effort to get playgrounds for these children is a misnomer; it is an effort to get money to give positions to people out of employment, and who prefer play positions to work. If they are men and can not make an honest living by honest toil in the city, then they ought to be sent to the farm, where they can do so, instead of to playgrounds to teach children to play. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

For health officer, $3,500; chief clerk and deputy health officer, $2,200; clerk, $1,400; 4 clerks, 2 of whom may act as sanitary and food inspectors, at $1,200 each; 2 clerks, at $1,000 each; clerk, $600; chief inspector and deputy health officer, $1,800; 15 sanitary and food inspectors, at $1,200 each; 1 inspector, $1,000; 1 inspector, $900; sanitary and food inspector, who shall be a veterinary surgeon and act as inspector of live stock and dairy farms, $1,200; 5 sanitary and food inspectors, who shall be veterinary surgeons, at $1,000 each; and 5 sanitary and food inspectors, at $900 each, to assist in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws and the regulations relating thereto; sanitary and food inspector, who shall also inspect dairy products and shall be a practical chemist, $1,800; messenger and janitor, $600; driver, $540; pound master, $1,500; and for laborers, at not exceeding $40 per month, $2,400; in all, $53,740.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of securing some information. I notice on page 63 there are provided 29 sanitary and food inspectors; on page 65 there is provided for special service in connection with the adulteration of foods and drugs $100, and then the item below, for continued expenses in relation to the enforcement of the same law, $1,000. May I ask what is the purpose of making these different items in these different shapes?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will say in regard to that item, for which $100 is appropriated, the purpose is, for instance, if there is a suspicion that impure candy or any article of food is adulterated or impure, to send some unknown person to get a sample in order to test it. It is a standing appropriation that may be used if necessary. It never has been abused, so far as I know.

Mr. MANN. It can not be possible that out of the 29 inspectors already provided they can find no one unknown at a store at which it is sold.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is the theory on which that has been provided.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, including personal services, of the public crematory, $3,000.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 40, under the head of "Public schools," and to insert after the provision providing for a clerk to carry out the provisions of the child-labor law an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NICHOLLS] asks unanimous consent to return to page 40 for the purpose of offering the amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purpose of appointing inspectors and enforcing the child labor law, $2,400.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. NICHOLLS. May I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection for a minute?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan reserves the objection.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I would like to state that my information is that no inspectors have been appointed as provided for in the child-labor law passed in the last session. Section 10 of that law provides that—

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint two inspectors to carry out the purposes of this act at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 each per annum.

I have been given to understand that those inspectors have not been appointed for the reason that no appropriation was made, and I also understand that in this bill no provision is made for them at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] insist upon his objection?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I want to say that my information is that the law has been rigidly enforced and will continue to be, and therefore I must insist upon my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Police court: For 2 judges, at $3,600 each; clerk, $2,000; 2 deputy clerks, at $1,500 each; 2 deputy clerks, at $1,200 each; deputy clerk, to be known as financial clerk, $1,500; 3 bailiffs, at $900 each; 4 bailiffs, at $720 each; deputy marshal, $1,000; janitor, $540; engineer, $900; assistant engineer, $720; fireman, $360; 2 assistant janitors, at $300 each; matron, $600; 3 charmen, at $360 each; in all, $27,480.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WILSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 67, at the end of line 22, insert:
"For 2 inspectors to enforce the child-labor law, at $1,200 each."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it and would say that they are already provided for in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes. I desire to make this statement, that the law already requires that two inspectors shall be appointed for the purpose of enforcing the child-labor laws in the District of Columbia. There is no provision whatsoever made in this bill, nor has there been in any previous bill, for the pay of those inspectors, and consequently a motion to amend to insert a provision for the payment of inspectors is in order.

Mr. BOWERS. Does not the gentleman know that the work has been absolutely done by men detailed from the police force, and that the law has been carried into effect?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I do not so understand it.

Mr. BOWERS. Do I understand that the gentleman has been advised that this law lies dormant; that it is a dead letter, and that nothing is done for its enforcement?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I do not make that statement; but I do make the statement that the machinery provided in the law itself for the enforcement of the law has not been utilized and is not being utilized.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman assert that certain machinery provided for in the law is not provided? Does he not know that certain members of the police force have been detailed to this particular work, and have done it?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. No; I do not so understand.

Mr. BOWERS. Does he deny that proposition?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. No; I will not deny it, but I do say that the law provides for the appointment of two inspectors by the commissioners for a specific purpose, and that these two inspectors detailed for a specific purpose have not been appointed.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman contend that there is a provision of law that requires that appointment; and if he does, will he not admit the proposition that two members of the police force, who are inspectors and appointed for this purpose, have been designated to take care of that particular situation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The act of May 28, 1908—"An act to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia"—distinctly provides:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint two inspectors to carry out the provisions of this act, at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 each per annum.

Unless they are already provided in the bill, so that it will make an additional number, the appropriation would seem to be expressly authorized. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order in this bill.

Mr. MACON. Is it germane to this particular part of the bill—for the support of the court? That is the point of order I thought the gentleman was making. I make the point of order that it is not germane.

Mr. BOWERS. This very matter was raised and voted on in consideration of another stage of this bill, or at another page, and it went out on a point of order.

Mr. MACON. The objection was made because it was a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BOWERS. Objection was made to recurring to that particular paragraph.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I take the ground that the amendment is perfectly germane.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania state exactly where he wants his amendment to come in?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. On page 67, after the word "dollars," in line 22, I had stated. I asked to change it to after the word "dollars" in line 20.

Mr. MACON. I object, Mr. Chairman. He would have to have unanimous consent to put it in at that point, and I insist on my point of order that it is not germane to this part of the bill. This part of the bill refers to the police court.

Mr. MANN. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that commencing with line 21, of page 66, down to and including line 7, on page 67, is all part of one proposition, of distinctive separate appropriations, which shall all be included in the $3,200. Now, the gentleman proposes to interject between these an item containing an entirely different proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to offer it as a separate paragraph.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I offered it after the word "dollars" in line 22.

Mr. MANN. The committee had read down to line 22 on page 66.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I offer the amendment after the word "dollars," in line 22, page 67, as a separate paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer it as an amendment to the paragraph or as a new paragraph?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I offer it as a new paragraph.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman distinctly offered his amendment to this paragraph, beginning after the word "dollars" in this particular line.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have a perfect right, Mr. Chairman, to offer it as an amendment to the paragraph or as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he withhold his amendment, because the item "Miscellaneous," which would immediately follow it, as the Chair understands, applies only to the police court. The gentleman can withhold it until the reading of line 12, on page 68.

Mr. MANN. The Chair might rule that he withhold, because if he did not withhold, the "miscellaneous" provided would provide for this office as part of the court officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is a little out of order at this time. The Chair can not take the time to read the long paragraph so as to understand the items fully, but has read far enough to learn that the caption "Miscellaneous" refers to the police court. If that is so, it would hardly be in order to insert the appropriation for two inspectors just before that caption, as that would make all the "miscellaneous" items apply to the inspectors and not to the police court, where they belong.

Mr. MANN. That is the point I made.

Mr. MACON. That is the reason I made the point of order.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the Chair rule it out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order to the amendment, as it is not germane to the part of the bill where it is now offered.

Mr. WANGER. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WANGER. Will it not be entirely in order for my colleague to offer his amendment after line 7, page 69?

The CHAIRMAN. Not until we reach that.

Mr. WANGER. He can withhold the amendment until later.

The CHAIRMAN. Let it be offered at that point when it is reached and the Chair will consider it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The next vacancy occurring in the office of justice of the peace for the District of Columbia shall not be filled, and thereafter the number of justices of the peace for the District of Columbia shall not exceed five.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to offer the amendment as a new paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert on page 69, after line 4:
"For two inspectors to enforce the child-labor law, at $1,200 each."

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph. I do not know whether it is subject to it or not.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved, and the gentleman, if he chooses, may speak upon the amendment.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the statement has been made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BOWERS] that the work required by the child-labor law to be performed by certain inspectors is being performed by some members of the police force, who have been delegated for that purpose. I have no desire to question that statement. Coming as it does from the gentleman from Mississippi, I believe it to be true; but the law that was passed one year ago specifically provided its own police regulations, the method for its own enforcement; provided that there should be two inspectors for that purpose, and stipulated what the salary should be; and it occurs to me that Congress having determined upon a law of that character, having determined upon that method of enforcing the law, should now proceed to provide the means by which those inspectors can be employed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Does the law confer upon these inspectors police powers?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Only in so far as the enforcement of the child-labor law is concerned.

Mr. MANN. I mean does it confer upon them police powers in the enforcement of the child-labor law?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Here is what the law says in relation to the matter:

That the Commissioners of the District are hereby authorized to appoint two inspectors to carry out the purposes of this act, at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 per annum.

Mr. MANN. We both want the law enforced.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me quite manifest that it is necessary in enforcing a law of that sort for the inspectors to have police powers. The question in my mind was whether these inspectors, if appointed, would have police powers, and hence whether it would be better to provide inspectors who have not police powers or to detail policemen to do the work of inspection.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Where it becomes the express duty of certain men to enforce certain laws, there is a greater likelihood of those laws being enforced than if that duty devolves upon another set of men whose police powers are general instead of special.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I quite agree with the gentleman on the general proposition; but if, as suggested by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BOWERS], two men now having police powers have been detailed by the commissioners to enforce the law, they have the same responsibility that they would have if they were named under the appropriation act.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman object to having these laws enforced by policemen?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Yes; to a certain extent.

Mr. BOWERS. Why? Does the gentleman desire to create——

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Permit me to answer the first question.

Mr. BOWERS. I will await the gentleman's answer.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I object to this extent, that I want to have men selected for the enforcement of that law whose special duty it is to see that the law is enforced in all of its parts.

Mr. BOWERS. But does not the gentleman understand that the members of the police force who are delegated for this duty are charged with this duty and no other? And may I inquire of the gentleman if in his objection to having this work done by a member of the police force, he desires to create two other officials in the machinery of the District government?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Those two other officials have already been created by law.

Mr. BOWERS. But if their duties may be discharged by policemen delegated for that purpose, does the gentleman desire further to burden the roll with two new officers, created for that purpose?

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I desire that these two men shall be appointed as inspectors, not as policemen. It may be that the commissioners at the present time have appointed policemen for that purpose, and it may also be that the commissioners who are to follow them may do the same thing; but it does not follow that if appropriations are not made for that purpose, the commissioners will hereafter appoint men for that purpose.

Mr. BOWERS. But the interesting fact remains that the work is now being done, and so far as this committee is enlightened by the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it has been satisfactorily done by policemen detailed for that purpose. With the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania it will add unnecessarily two more persons to the pay roll of the District of Columbia. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FULTON. Do these police officers who are detailed to do this work have any other duties to perform?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know whether they do or not, but they are detailed to do this work, and while they are doing it they do not perform any other. And I may say to the gentleman that this committee, in investigating that proposition, has found that the city of Washington has more policemen to the square foot and to the number of inhabitants than any other city of similar size in the United States.

Mr. FULTON. What do they do?

Mr. BOWERS. Oh, walk about.

Mr. FULTON. What I am trying to get at is this: Does not the gentleman from Mississippi believe that the service that will be rendered by these two appointees provided for by this amendment will be better if they do not have anything else to do except to attend to this business?

Mr. BOWERS. So long as these present policemen are about these duties I do not think they have anything else to do. Furthermore, there has not been the slightest objection made by my friend from Pennsylvania that these duties are not well performed.

Mr. FULTON. Do they detail one man to-day and another man to-morrow?

Mr. BOWERS. They detail two men for this particular purpose.

Mr. FULTON. For the entire year?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know about that.

Mr. FULTON. Do they appoint one man to-day and another man to-morrow?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not know.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BOWERS. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In regard to the question raised by the gentleman from Oklahoma, I will say to the House that when this provision was passed by the House at the last session there was no provision for compensation. In order to give the law immediate effect the commissioners detailed two policemen whom they believed to be expressly qualified for this specific work. They are limited to that work now and detailed for that particular purpose and do nothing else, and, so far as information came to the committee, there is absolutely no fault found anywhere in the administration of the law.

Mr. BOWERS. I do not think even the gentleman from Pennsylvania will suggest that the child-labor law in this District has not been properly enforced. I invite him to say whether he finds any fault with the enforcement of that law.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I have not challenged the gentleman's statement in any way or form.

Mr. BOWERS. Then it seems to me that the failure to challenge the present machinery of the administration is a sufficient answer to every objection.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Mississippi understands as well as the gentleman from Pennsylvania understands that any appointment or selection that is made by the commissioners of policemen to perform this duty is merely optional with them; and if no appropriation is made by this Congress for the purpose of furnishing two inspectors, the commissioners may turn their entire attention toward policing the city in other respects and omit entirely the inspection under this child-labor law.

Mr. BOWERS. Up to this time a sufficient detail has been made to take care of this law; it has taken care of this law, and it has taken care of it efficiently, and "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Michigan makes the statement that it was simply until appropriations could be made.

Mr. BOWERS. Does the gentleman challenge the truth of the statement that the law has been efficiently enforced? I want to know if my friend from Pennsylvania intends to suggest in the least degree that this law has not been enforced efficiently and to the letter.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I make the statement that the law has not been enforced to the letter, because of the fact that the inspectors provided for by the law have not been appointed, and that no appropriation has been made to furnish the means.

Mr. BOWERS. The gentleman is in conflict with the Commissioners of the District. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that I reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is in order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania) there were 14 ayes and 26 noes.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania demands tellers. Those in favor of tellers will rise. [After counting.] Seven gentlemen have arisen; not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 3 of the act approved March 23, 1906, which makes it the duty of the superintendent in charge of the workhouse of the District of Columbia, in which any person is confined on account of a sentence under said act, to pay out of any funds available to the persons named in said act a sum equal to 50 cents for each day's hard labor performed by said person so confined, is hereby repealed.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, we will not contest the point of order, but are very glad to arrest the attention of the House for a moment in order that we may explain the situation of the committee. The committee was led to believe that increasing the appropriation from $200 to $2,400 was putting a premium on vagrancy, but light has come to the committee, or to some members of the committee, that makes it appear—and I will speak only for myself—that we were acting under a misapprehension. Up to January 1, $777 had been used, and probably not more than $1,500 will be used this year. I send forward the following amendment, which I ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist on the point of order?

Mr. KEIFER. I reserve the point of order if the gentleman wants to amend the paragraph, but I shall insist on the point of order as it is at present.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the proposed amendment for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 74, in lieu of the paragraph stricken out on a point of order, insert:

"For payment to the beneficiaries named in section 3 of an act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or wilfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances, approved March 23, 1906, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia on itemized vouchers duly audited and approved by the auditor of the District."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order should be made against that amendment and also that it might be offered independent of the paragraph to which the point of order is sought to be made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio insist upon the point of order?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order, and I desire to be heard on the point.

Mr. BENNET of New York. But as I understand it, the gentleman from Michigan concedes the point of order.

Mr. MANN. This is a separate and independent section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, allow me to say this much in justification of making the point of order: That this provision, if in the bill when it became a law, would undertake to change the whole character of the law that was passed March 23, 1906, the object of which was to make husbands take care of their families and their wives and their minor dependent children, and to inject in here a repeal of the last section of that would be to overthrow practically the whole act, which is a good one and one such as we find generally throughout the States of the Union.

Mr. BOWERS. May I ask the gentleman to withhold the point of order for a moment?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Chairman, I understand the gentleman reserves the point of order on that provision of the bill which repeals the existing legislation with reference to the payment of a certain sum of money to the dependent families of those who are committed to the workhouse under certain circumstances. Mr. Chairman, the committee reported this provision with a full knowledge of the fact that it would be subject to a point of order, and with the expectation that the point of order would probably be made; but the committee conceived it to be its duty to bring to the attention of the House in this way the effect of the legislation which was passed some time ago on this subject.

The provision against which this point of order is aimed repeals the law that the dependent families of those who do not support them shall be maintained out of the Public Treasury. It means simply this: That if A is arrested because of his failure to provide for his family and is committed to the workhouse by reason of that breach of the law, the Government and the District shall pay to his family or do for his family that thing which A did not do theretofore.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BOWERS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's statement being correct, but not quite full, I would suggest that in order to get this the man must perform hard labor.

Mr. BOWERS. I am coming to that, and I thank the gentleman "for teaching me that word," because I have had an opportunity to inspect the hard labor that was done by A. I had the pleasure of watching some of those who were committed for violations of this particular act and of holding the watch on them for the purpose of ascertaining how long it took them to move one particular shovel of dirt.

Mr. COX of Indiana. How long did it take?

Mr. BOWERS. Well, it was not quite five minutes. I give them the benefit of the doubt. Of course I understand that this point of order is going to be insisted upon, and I know the provision is going out, but I do not want it to go out without some notice to the House of the condition of the legislation on that subject and the way in which it operates, and it is for that reason that I have asked the gentleman from Ohio to withhold his point of order. The obligation of the District and the Government to these people results from the fact that they do not obey their own obligations. No person is a beneficiary under this provision except by reason of the fact that the husband or father fails to do the thing which this law puts the burden upon the District to do. Now, we have been told it is a trifling amount, and so it is in amount, and it is by reason of the growth of this particular item that the committee has felt it wise to bring this matter to the attention of the House. When this provision was inserted in the law two years ago the appropriation suggested by the commissioners and passed was $200. The last suggestion is $2,000.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation last year was $2,400, the current law is $2,400.

Mr. BOWERS. Larger than I thought. My idea was that it was only $2,000, and I find it is $2,400 as against $2,000; and I call the attention of the committee to the growth in two years from $200 to $2,400 and leave the question with them. I did not want that to pass without some understanding of the subject.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a word in justification of my opposition to this provision of the bill. Under the act passed March 3, 1906, which had for its object the punishment of husbands and fathers of minor children who, for various reasons or without reasons, neglected to maintain their families, a person convicted of neglecting to maintain his wife or minor children might be fined a sum of $500 or imprisoned, or both fined and imprisoned; and in case where such a person has been imprisoned by the judgment of the court, it is required that for every day of hard labor he performs during his sentence there shall be paid to the dependent wife or minor children, or for their benefit, 50 cents a day. This is a case where the authorities undertake to punish a man for not doing that which he might do, and while they are imprisoning him as a means of punishment still making through his own labor some compensation toward maintaining the dependent ones. It is a wise law. My friend on the committee from Mississippi thinks that the Government pays it. If the Government in the administration of the law imprisons a man and makes it impossible for him to labor to maintain his own wife and dependent minor children, the Government might well bear some burden in taking care of those people.

Mr. BOWERS. What was he doing in that regard before he goes to prison?

Mr. KEIFER. In many cases, I do not know an individual case, but in many cases he was earning money and spending it on other people and not upon his own children.

Mr. BOWERS. Does not my friend understand that the reason why he is imprisoned is because he does not support his family?

Mr. KEIFER. Undoubtedly, but while he is there, if he performs a day's labor, which may be worth $2——

Mr. BOWERS. Or 2 cents.

Mr. KEIFER. Or if he works slowly, it may be worth a dollar, or working still slower, 50 cents; it is all to be paid to the dependent family in consequence of each day's labor.

Mr. BOWERS. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly.

Mr. BOWERS. Does not the gentleman know that the superintendent of that institution says that in the cold weather, in the hard times, they break into the workhouse in order to get a comfortable home?

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman is alluding to another class of people altogether—those who are generally called tramps. That is the class of people to whom the gentleman has reference; but we are dealing with the class of people who, in the judgment of the law, can and ought to maintain their families——

Mr. BOWERS. But do not.

Mr. KEIFER. And if we imprison them and punish them in order to make them do what they ought to do, we ought at least, if they perform labor, to pay their families the small sum of 50 cents a day. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman from Michigan offers the amendment which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 74, in lieu of the paragraph stricken out on a point of order, insert:

"For payment to the beneficiaries named in section 3 of an act making it a misdemeanor in the District of Columbia to abandon or willfully neglect to provide for the support and maintenance by any person of his wife or his or her minor children in destitute or necessitous circumstances, approved March 23, 1906, $2,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be disbursed by the disbursing officer of the District of Columbia on itemized vouchers duly audited and approved by the auditor of the District."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, that is the statute as it stands, or did stand previous to the recommendation of the committee, under the appropriation, less $400.

Mr. MANN. I want to state to the gentleman that there has been considerable talk about how rapidly this expenditure has increased. The law for the current year is $2,400. If this rapid increase is taking place, the Government being absolutely obligated to pay this money in the end, what is the purpose of reducing the amount for the next fiscal year?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it was stated a few minutes ago that up to January $777 of the $2,400 had been used. The probabilities are that the ensuing months of the fiscal year will not consume as much as they have already. It was put at $2,000 so as to cover any reasonable contingency.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the probabilities are that during the winter season the expenditure will be greater than during the mild season?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is now nearly 66 per cent of increase.

Mr. TAWNEY. There is more loafing.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] says it is because there is more loafing. I do not know. If some man, who is unable to get work and has a wife and children, is willing to go to jail in order that his wife and children may get 50 cents a day, I will take my hat off to him.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the gentleman could see these men at work, he would not wonder they were out of a job.

Mr. MANN. It is a part of the prerogative of the gentleman to require them to work. The law says hard labor. The gentleman ought to have a provision to correct that.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Allow me to say right at that point that one of the weaknesses of the whole thing is that they are transported in the Government's carriage, with a government guard, 1, 2, 3, or 4 miles, and that they do not average but about four hours a day. It is said on good authority that a recent commissioner, when he conceived the idea, tickled himself over a new idea and went around congratulating others on the brightness of the conception.

He made a proposition to the Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds that he would employ these men down on the works beyond the Washington Monument, and it was said to him:

If you will pay the guards, we will allow you to have the prisoners.

Three guards were detailed to look out for 20 prisoners. They worked three days. The engineer commissioner said:

Take off your guard and take the prisoners back to the workhouse. I am losing money.

Mr. MANN. If all the gentleman states is true, and I have no reason to doubt it, and I always accept the gentleman's word, it is an additional reason and the first real reason that I have heard for remodeling the whole system of the workhouse here, as suggested in the President's message the other day. I suppose that is what we will do, then.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, right on that point you will not find anything in the appropriations for the workhouse in improvements of any sort or kind. It is deferred until we get the report from this commission that has been appointed and which has reported since the committee completed framing the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 25392) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ITALIAN EARTHQUAKE DISASTER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication (S. Doc. No. 649), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

ROME, January 13, 1909.

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington:

In the name of the members of the Chamber of Deputies, I beg to convey their sincere appreciation of the kind sympathy shown by you in this hour of extreme desolation for our country. It is another link that binds us more closely together in that traditional friendship that we have always felt for your chivalrous people.

PRESIDENT MARCORA.

[Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MUDD, by unanimous consent, obtained leave of absence, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEIFER, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 26203) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 1851), ordered to be printed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state I do not expect to call up this bill to-morrow; but unless there is something intervening that is more important I hope to call it up the succeeding day for consideration. I wish to say that some gentlemen have spoken to me about a desire to have some general debate. I am not certain as to the number. If they will make known their wishes before then we will try to make an arrangement for short general debate.

BAY RUM.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported with amendment the bill (H. R. 22884) more completely to accomplish the objects contemplated by section 3 of the act of April 12, 1900, chapter 191, which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 1852), ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from Hamilton, Colbert, Yerkes & Hamilton, transmitting report of the Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator, and Railway Company for the year ended December 31, 1908 (S. Doc. No. 650)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8243) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to reserve power sites on the Colville Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington, submitted an adverse report (No. 754) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DIXON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8273) to amend an act approved May 30, 1908, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all the surplus lands after allotment," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 761) thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11460) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. Houck, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 760) thereon.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4836) to correct the military record of James E. C. Covel (Report No. 765); and

A bill (S. 5756) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Solomon M. Bennett (Report No. 766).

Mr. BULKELEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3751) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue discarded arms to camps of the United Spanish War Veterans, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 767) thereon.

Mr. McCREARY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4116) authorizing the Secretary of War to place the name of Joseph F. Ritcherdson on the rolls of Company C, One hundred and twenty-second Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and issue him an honorable discharge, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report (No. 768) thereon.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT AT SOMERVILLE, MASS.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report back favorably with an amendment the joint resolution (S. R. 114) authorizing the Secretary of War to dispose of certain bronze or brass cannon, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was at the end of line 4, after the word "seven," to insert the word "condemned," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to deliver to the mayor of Somerville, Mass., seven condemned bronze or brass cannon of a total weight 8,000 pounds to be used in the making of a soldiers' monument in that city: Provided, That the Government shall be at no expense in connection with this gift.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GIFT OF CONSTITUTION ISLAND, NEW YORK.

Mr. LODGE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 219) to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York, to report it favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I submit a report (No. 758) thereon. I make the same request, for the present consideration of this joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The committee report to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage and Miss Anna Bartlett Warner a donation of the lands constituting Constitution Island, situated on the east side of the Hudson River, in Putnam County, N. Y., opposite the military reservation at West Point: Provided, That the lands so donated shall be assigned in perpetuity to the use of the United States Military Academy and shall form a part of the military reservation at West Point, N. Y., and no part of the said lands shall ever be used as a public picnic or excursion or amusement ground operated by private enterprise, individual or corporate, for profit: Provided also, That Miss Anna Bartlett Warner shall be permitted to reside on said island in full possession of her dwelling and the gardens and buildings appurtenant thereto during her natural life, and shall continue in the enjoyment of the privileges to which she is now entitled in virtue of her ownership.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the report of the committee may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[S. Rept. No. 758, 60th Cong., 2d sess.]

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report, to accompany House joint resolution 219.

The Committee on Military Affairs, which has had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 219) to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York, reports the same favorably to the Senate, and recommends that it be passed with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage and Miss Anna Bartlett Warner a donation of the lands constituting Constitution Island, situated on the east side of the Hudson River, in Putnam County, N. Y., opposite the military reservation at West Point: Provided, That the lands so donated shall be assigned in perpetuity to the use of the United States Military Academy and shall form a part of the military reservation at West Point, N. Y., and no part of the said lands shall ever be used as a public picnic or excursion or amusement ground operated by private enterprise, individual or corporate, for profit: Provided also, That Miss Anna Bartlett Warner shall be permitted to reside on said island in full possession of her dwelling and the gardens and buildings appurtenant thereto during her natural life, and shall continue in the enjoyment of the privileges to which she is now entitled in virtue of her ownership."

This is a most generous gift of 300 acres of valuable ground lying very close to West Point. For many years it has been the desire of the Secretaries of War and the authorities of the United States that these lands should be purchased and become part of the United States reservation. Mrs. Russell Sage has most generously and patriotically purchased this land from Miss Warner, the present owner, who is given a price upon it undoubtedly less than one-half of what it could have been sold for for commercial purposes, believing it should belong to the United States. This resolution simply provides for the acceptance of this offer by direction of Congress for the United States.

Constitution Island, as anyone acquainted with the history of the place knows, lies just across the Hudson River from West Point, and was a fortified point during the war of the Revolution. There are many interesting historical associations connected with the island. Its location is such as to make it of very great advantage to the United States and to the academy.

Miss Anna Bartlett Warner has for years hoped that she might be able to see her property go to the United States, for there are no descendants of her family, and only distant collateral heirs who could share in the property, in whom she has no particular or special interest. Mrs. Sage has made it possible for the property to go to the Government as a gift. The arrangements that Miss Warner hopes to have made are mentioned by the Secretary of War in his report, contained in the President's message, quoted below. Certainly it is the thing for the United States to do, and this Congress especially to do, in an independent and separate resolution, to accept this very gracious and patriotic gift in a way by which she and Mrs. Sage can feel that the appreciation of the people of the United States is fittingly expressed.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

CONSTITUTION ISLAND, NEW YORK.

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of an item authorizing the Secretary of War to accept the donation, subject to certain conditions of the property known as "Constitutional Island," opposite West Point, N. Y., for use of the Military Academy, tendered as a gift by Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage and Miss Anna Bartlett Warner.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith, with my approval of the recommendations contained therein, a communication from the Secretary of War transmitting draft of an item authorizing the Secretary of War to accept the donation, subject to certain conditions, of the property known as Constitution Island, opposite West Point, N. Y., containing 250 acres of upland and 50 acres of meadow, as an addition to the West Point Military Reservation, for use of the Military Academy, which was tendered as a gift by Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage and Miss Anna Bartlett Warner under date of September 4, 1908.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 8, 1909.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 5, 1909.

The PRESIDENT:

Referring to the letter addressed to you by Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage (Mrs. Russell Sage) under date of September 4, 1908, tendering, as a gift from herself and Miss Anna Bartlett Warner, the property known as Constitution Island, opposite West Point, N. Y., containing 230 acres of upland and 50 acres of meadow, as an addition to the West Point Military Reservation, for use of the Military Academy, I have the honor to transmit herewith draft of an item authorizing the Secretary of War to accept the donation, subject to certain conditions, with request that the same be transmitted to Congress favorably recommended, if deemed advisable, for insertion in the current Military Academy bill.

Upon favorable action by Congress, a deed will be secured vesting in the United States full jurisdiction over the island.

The acquisition of this island will be of advantage to the academy, and also guard against its possible future use for undesirable purposes.

Since this letter was prepared it has come to the notice of the department that Representative CHANEY introduced, under date of 4th instant, the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York.

Resolved, etc., That the United States accepts, with thanks and appreciation, the gift of Constitution Island, Hudson River, New York, lying opposite the West Point Military Reservation, so graciously and patriotically donated to the Government by Miss Anna Bartlett Warner and Mrs. Russell Sage; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to receive a deed for the same in the name of and for the benefit of the United States.

As will be seen, the joint resolution does not provide the conditions recommended by the War Department, which were based on the wishes expressed by Mrs. Sage in her letter making the tender of the property, especially regarding the continued residence of Miss Warner on the premises, which it is thought should be incorporated in the act.

Very respectfully,

LUKE E. WRIGHT,
Secretary of War.

DRAFT OF AN ITEM FOR INSERTION IN THE MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept from Mrs. Margaret Olivia Sage and Miss Anna Bartlett Warner a donation of the lands constituting Constitution Island, situated on the east side of the Hudson River, in Putnam County, N. Y., opposite the military reservation at West Point: Provided, That the lands so donated shall be assigned in perpetuity to the use of the United States Military Academy and shall form a part of the military reservation at West Point, N. Y., and no part of the said lands shall ever be used as a public picnic or excursion or amusement ground operated by private enterprise, individual or corporate, for profit: Provided also, That Miss Anna Bartlett Warner shall be permitted to reside on said island in full possession of her dwelling and the gardens and buildings appurtenant thereto during her natural life, and shall continue in the enjoyment of the privileges to which she is now entitled in virtue of her ownership.

IMPROVEMENT OF CHINCOTEAGUE BAY.

Mr. MARTIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 60, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of the shoal or bar at the entrance to Chincoteague Bay, with a view to the removal of said shoal or bar, and providing for a channel depth of 15 feet at that point, and to submit estimates for such improvement.

CURRENT RIVER BRIDGE, MISSOURI.

Mr. MARTIN. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (H. R. 23713) authorizing the construction of a bridge across Current River, Missouri. I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] to the report.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Virginia.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the words "an iron drawbridge" and insert in lieu the words "a bridge," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county court of Carter County, Mo., their successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Current River, at a point to be approved by the Chief of Engineers and Secretary of War, near Van Buren Ferry, in Carter County, Mo.

SEC. 2. That the bridge authorized to be constructed by this act shall be constructed in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EDWARD T. LINCOLN.

Mr. PLATT. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 8615) to correct the naval record of Edward T. Lincoln, and I submit a report (No. 745) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to correct the record of service of Edward T. Lincoln, late an acting master's mate in the navy during the war of the rebellion, to show that he was honorably discharged the service on January 8, 1865.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RANDOLPH W. CAMPBELL.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14343) to correct the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 746) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell and issue to him, or his heirs, an honorable discharge from said service as of April 16, 1863, in recognition of his three years' subsequent faithful service in the United States Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION IN ALASKAN WATERS.

Mr. PILES. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 8005) authorizing the establishment of aids to navigation in Alaskan waters and making an appropriation therefor, and I submit a report (No. 756) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill. It is of grave necessity.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to establish, under the direction and supervision of the Light-House Board, such aids to navigation in Alaskan waters as may, in his opinion, be considered advisable and necessary, and appropriates for the purposes authorized by this act the sum of $140,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF WARROAD HARBOR, MINNESOTA.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 65, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for deepening the channel and the entrance to same of Warroad Harbor, Minnesota, and protecting the channel and entrance to the same by means of a dike or otherwise.

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION LANDS, UTAH.

Mr. WARNER. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7396) for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 757) thereon. I call the attention of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I ask for the present consideration of the bill just reported by the Senator from Missouri.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMPROVEMENT OF LAKE TRAVERSE, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. DEPEW. From the Committee on Commerce I report back Senate concurrent resolution No. 61 favorably, with an amendment, and I call the attention of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] to it.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask for the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

The amendment was, in line 4, before the words "Lake Traverse," to strike out the words "and lighting" and insert the word "of," so as to read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of improvement of Lake Traverse, in the State of South Dakota and county of Roberts, and report same to the Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF BIG SIOUX RIVER, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. DEPEW, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 68, reported it favorably without amendment, and, on request of Mr. KITTREDGE, it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimates to be made for a project of straightening and improvement of the Big Sioux River, in the State of South Dakota, and report same to the Congress.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. BURROWS, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 57, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 10th day of February, 1909, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A, and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

OSAGE BOARDING SCHOOL, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. OWEN. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 111) authorizing the rebuilding of the dormitory at Osage Boarding School, Oklahoma, recently destroyed by fire, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 755) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to expend, out of any money in the United States Treasury belonging to the Osage tribe of Indians, $14,000 for the rebuilding and equipment of the boys' dormitory at the Osage Boarding School, Oklahoma, recently destroyed by fire.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report (No. 759) thereon. I desire to give notice that to-morrow early in the day I will ask the Senate to take up the bill for consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

AFFAIRS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories, moved that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. BEVERIDGE, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas.

LANDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in the act of May 30, 1908, to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes, a commission was created, under section 26, consisting of the Secretary of War, the Attorney-General, the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the United States Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the United States House of Representatives for the purpose of investigating the title of the United States in and to all lands in the District of Columbia.

I have before me, Mr. President, maps, charts, and a report of that commission, and I report two bills, to be sent to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask that the maps and charts be printed as a part of the report.

I think not only the members of the Senate, but all the citizens of the District of Columbia, will be greatly interested in the maps and in the report. The commission have found that there is a great deal of property in the District of Columbia occupied by people who apparently have no title, and a great deal of it where the title is under a cloud. The bills provide for an appropriation to make further investigations as to the title the Government has in a large amount of property in the District of Columbia.

In this connection I wish to state what probably all Senators know, that where the general wholesale and city markets are now situated, between Seventh and Ninth streets, the lands belong to the Government. The expenditure of a few thousand dollars would purchase all these temporary structures and free this site for public buildings; for I take it there is no intention of permitting such a valuable site to be long used for such purposes.

We also find, when trying to condemn property for the use of the Government, that the prices put on by the agents and the owners themselves are exorbitant as compared with the amount of taxes they are paying on such property. I wish to give notice that at some future day I shall introduce a bill under which we will try to compel people who think they have such valuable property when it becomes necessary for the Government to have it to pay at least a fair proportion of the taxes of the District of Columbia. I submit with the report the charts and maps, and ask that they be printed (S. Doc. No. 653) and referred, with the report and bills, to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (S. 8449) to repeal acts heretofore passed relating to alienation of the title of the United States to land in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (S. 8450) to provide for ascertaining the interest or title of the United States in any land or water rights in the District of Columbia, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—OREGON LANDS.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, it is not at all pleasant to me to feel it necessary or desirable that I should obtrude my personality and things connected therewith, both official and as a man, upon the attention of this body. I have enough notoriety already, and I am not anxious to advertise myself. But the Senate knows the provocation under which I lie, and I trust will bear with me.

Yesterday, in the newspapers of this city—and probably some kind of a synopsis of it was sent off by the press association—there appeared a statement from the Attorney-General controverting in some particulars, or attempting to controvert, the speech which I made here last Monday.

In order that the RECORD may be kept entirely full, that there may be no omission, I send to the desk and ask to have read the official copy which came to me this morning from the Attorney-General's office. In other words, I telephoned up there to see that there was no mistake, and was sent what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

JANUARY 12, 1909.

There are two passages in the remarks of Senator TILLMAN, published in to-day's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which demand notice from me. He says (RECORD, p. 734):

"It might be well to inquire whether or not the Attorney-General has been ordered not to obey the law of Congress passed last April—which I will call the 'Tillman-Bonaparte law'—ordering suit to be instituted for the recovery of these lands. My culpability is of such enormity and magnitude in contemplating the purchase of 1,440 acres of land at $2.50 an acre in the eyes of this stickler for official rectitude in others that it may be found that he is determined to block my so-called 'nefarious transactions.'

"The man who announces to Congress that he, Theodore Roosevelt, assumed the right to permit the Steel Trust to absorb its greatest rival contrary to law would doubtless not hesitate to help his dear friend, Harriman, in holding 2,000,000 acres of the public domain, simply because BEN TILLMAN has contemplated and wanted to buy 1,440 acres."

On September 4, 1908, suit was brought by the United States of America in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon against the Oregon and California Railroad Company; the Southern Pacific Company; the Union Trust Company, individually and as trustee; Stephen T. Gage, individually and as trustee; and a large number of individual defendants. The purpose of this suit is, in substance, to declare and enforce a forfeiture of the public lands claimed by the railroads under Mr. Harriman's control by virtue of the original grant to the Oregon and California Railroad. It has been brought in accordance with the directions of the joint resolution to which Senator TILLMAN refers; was instituted as soon as practicable after the passage of the said resolution, and the fact of its institution has been published and could have been verified by anyone, through inquiry at this department, for more than four months.

Senator TILLMAN says in another part of his speech [RECORD, p. 732]:

"In my conversation with the Attorney-General in regard to the resolution which I introduced, and which he himself prepared after we had talked over the whole land situation, I distinctly remember telling him that my interest in the matter had been first aroused by my desire to purchase some of the timber land, and that my coming to him was due to the fact that I discovered upon investigation that I could not buy it through any agency whatsoever; that I could not buy it even by a lawsuit, because I was advised by very able lawyers in the West, among them the Hon. George Turner, of Washington, that in attacking the holders of those land grants no one would have any standing in court except the grantor, the Government itself."

Senator TILLMAN called upon me at the Department of Justice a few days before the introduction by him of the resolution which I see by the RECORD he presented to the Senate on January 31, 1908. Our interview occurred, therefore, a little less than three weeks before his letter of February 15 to Messrs. Reeder & Watkins, in which he requested them "to hold in reserve" for him "eight of the best quarter sections," and probably a little more than three weeks before his statement in the Senate that he had not "bought any land anywhere in the West or undertaken to buy any." He told me he wished information as to the status of the lands embraced in these Oregon grants, because he had heard so much complaint about the conduct of the corporations claiming them during his recent journey through the States of the Pacific slope. He criticised with great severity the policy of granting the public domain to such corporations and mentioned that, on some occasion, in discussing a proposed land grant of this character, he had said to certain of his colleagues: "You may as well give them what they want now; you have given them pretty much everything else."

He said, according to my recollection, that the lands had become of great value and many persons wished to purchase them, and added that he would have been glad to do so himself if he could; but he never told me a word of any connection on his part with an arrangement to acquire some part of these lands, nor that he intended, expected, or even desired, at that time, to make any such purchase. As stated by him, his reason for making these inquiries was that he might better discharge his public duties; and I was totally ignorant until I saw the documents transmitted by the President to Senator HALE that Senator TILLMAN, at the time of his conversation with me, had any private interest, whether actual or in expectation, in connection with the subject of our conversation. I gave him a full statement of the information which had been collected by the department as the result of a protracted investigation made by Messrs. Townsend and McBlair as special counsel, and which had continued during a considerable part of the preceding year. I told him also that we deemed it advisable to secure congressional action in the form of a resolution empowering the Attorney-General to claim a forfeiture of these lands; and that I felt some apprehension lest such action should be opposed by the large interests which it would affect. Senator TILLMAN then offered to introduce a resolution on the subject, if I would prepare one; and I did prepare such a resolution, which was introduced by him and subsequently adopted. During this interview I explained to him that it would be impracticable to compel the corporations claiming these lands to sell any particular portion of them to any particular person; although, of course, if the Government could establish a forfeiture of rights under the grant, the lands might become afterwards open to entry on the same terms as any other portion of the public domain. Of course, if it was, at the time, his purpose to secure some part of the lands in question, through arrangements with Messrs. Reeder & Watkins or otherwise, this forfeiture might tend to promote his individual interest; but I had no reason to credit him with any such purpose, and I dealt with him throughout as asking the information and advice I could give only that he might fulfill his duty as a public officer.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, the document which has just been read bears sufficient evidence to anyone who will read it critically of careful preparation. It will also show, I think, that the Attorney-General went out of his way to try to bolster up and fortify the President's accusations against me. He speaks of an "arrangement;" he did not know I had made an arrangement—I believe those are the words—to buy any of these lands. The only lands to which he alludes in this document are the railroad-grant lands held by the Southern Pacific road, and as far as this statement concerns those lands it is absolutely accurate, because I knew after the thorough investigation I made that to purchase any of that land after the cancellation of the patents, if that was obtained, they could only be sold to "actual settlers;" and as I have never at any time contemplated settling in Oregon, as I knew of the difficulties and troubles and prosecutions which had come to Members of this body and Members of the other body under accusations of obtaining lands fraudulently—that is, by bogus entries—I had never thought for a second of buying any of the lands granted to the railroad—"these lands." The lands I wanted to purchase and about which I telegraphed Reeder & Watkins and wrote them letters are lands held by the Southern Oregon Company, which, as I have already explained once, but I will explain again, is a corporation which holds about 100,000 acres of the most valuable timber and coal lands in Oregon, granted to the State of Oregon in 1868, granted by the State of Oregon shortly afterwards under the limitation imposed by the grant from this Government to a construction company, and sold by that construction company to the Southern Oregon Company, which now holds the land.

That land differs from any other land in the West that I know of, inasmuch as the original grant and subsequent grant by the State simply required that it should be sold to "purchasers" in quantities not exceeding 160 acres to one person, and at a price not exceeding two dollars and a half per acre. It therefore must not be confused with the land which is subject to the actual-settler clause or the homestead provision.

A careful and critical analysis of this paper shows that, while the Attorney-General does not directly controvert or deny my statement in regard to my having told him, he denies my statement by implication. He would have it appear that I did not in anywise disclose to him my purpose to buy some of this particular land. If I were to take the time to critically analyze, I could show that to anyone; but the gentlemen here who are interested will do that for themselves, and therefore I will not pause longer on that phase of it. Here, however, is a paragraph to which I direct special attention. He says:

> He [TILLMAN] said, according to my recollection, that the lands have become of great value and many persons wished to purchase them, and added that he would have been glad to do so himself if he could.

That applies, according to the Attorney-General's statement, to the railroad lands, which is false. I did try, and told him so, to buy the Southern Oregon Company's lands—the military-road lands. It is an issue, then, of memory as to what kind of lands I had in mind. I will not say that it is an issue of veracity; but I am ready to have my word put against his in any court in Christendom in this or any other tribunal that chooses to investigate, and let my record in the past for truthfulness and honesty and integrity stand as against his. But that, Mr. President, is enough.

The Attorney-General quoted from my speech that part of it which I will not repeat, for it has just been read, making inquiry as to whether or not the suits ordered by the joint resolution of April 30 last had been complied with, and he went on to state that certain suits had been brought as far back as September 4, mentioning a large number of companies and individuals, and then winding up with the statement that—

> The fact of its institution has been published and could have been verified by any one through inquiry at this department for more than four months.

The impression which he sought to convey was that he had complied with the law; that he had obeyed it. What is the law? I have it in my hand and I will ask to have it printed, but will only read one paragraph. In enumerating the various corporations which are to be sued, I find this:

> Also, "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State."

I only read the part of it that I care to have read, showing that the military road land was named in the law which required the Attorney-General to bring suit.

The act referred to is as follows:

[Public resolution—No. 18.]

S. R. 48. Joint resolution instructing the Attorney-General to institute certain suits, etc.

Resolved, etc., That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to institute and prosecute any and all suits in equity, actions at law, and other proceedings which he may deem adequate and appropriate to enforce any and all rights and remedies of the United States of America in any manner arising or growing out of or pertaining to either or any of the following-described acts of Congress, to wit: "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Central Pacific Railroad in California to Portland, in Oregon," approved July 25, 1866, as amended by the acts approved June 25, 1868, and April 10, 1869; also "An act granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from the navigable waters of Coos Bay to Roseburg, in said State," approved March 3, 1869; also "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Portland to Astoria and McMinnville, in the State of Oregon," approved May 4, 1870, including all rights and remedies in any manner relating to the lands, or any part thereof, granted by either or any of said acts; and in and by any and all such suits, actions, or proceedings the Attorney-General shall, in such manner as he shall deem appropriate, assert all rights and remedies existing in favor of the United States relating to the subject of such suits, actions, and proceedings, including the claim on behalf of the United States that the lands granted by each of said acts, respectively, or any part thereof, have been and are forfeited to the United States by reason of any breaches or violations of any of the terms or conditions of either or any of said acts which may be alleged and established in any such suits, actions, or proceedings; it not being intended hereby to determine the right of the United States to any such forfeiture or forfeitures, but it being intended to fully authorize the Attorney-General in and by such suits, actions, or proceedings to assert on behalf of the United States and the court or courts before which such suits, actions, or proceedings may be instituted or pending to entertain, consider, and adjudicate the claim and right of the United States to such forfeiture or forfeitures, and if found to enforce the same: Resolved further, That the authority and direction hereinbefore given shall extend to any and all suits, actions, or proceedings which may be instituted or pending under the authority of the Attorney-General at the time of the adoption and approval hereof.

Approved April 30, 1908.

Mr. TILLMAN. Knowing, Mr. President, that I am dealing not only with Theodore Roosevelt, but with every department of this Government, and that they are all leagued together and have had Cabinet meetings, according to the newspapers, to discuss me and my affairs and how to accomplish my ruin, if possible, I was prepared when I made the statement in the Senate on Monday to have the Attorney-General deny that I had told him anything about this. I expected it. I was prepared, and even now am prepared, to have the man sent to me from the Post-Office Department, called over the telephone, to whom I explained my reasons for wanting a fraud order issued against Dorr do the same. I expected them to give notice to him that he must lie, must swear I did not say a word to him about my desire to purchase the land, so that the President would have a Cabinet officer and an underling, two of them, to deny my statement. I was prepared for all that. When I deal with such unscrupulous men as are after me now I am prepared for anything, even the assassin's knife. My mail is being held up, or I have every reason to believe it is. My committee room—I will not say it has been broken into, for there are keys to open almost anything around this Capitol—but from my desk has disappeared a large envelope containing a great deal of correspondence and other papers relating to my land investigations in the West. They did not get everything I had in there, but that envelope is gone. They may not have stolen it. It is gone, however.

But when the Attorney-General in this interview gave forth the statement that he had brought suit—and that fact could have been verified very easily—I thought it was just as well for me to get to the bottom. So yesterday I called up the Attorney-General by telephone. After some little trouble I got that officer himself and told him who I was and said to him: "Mr. Bonaparte, has the suit ordered by Congress last April against the Southern Oregon Company been instituted?"

He did not know. There had been some correspondence and discussion back and forth as to the methods that should be pursued by the special counsel. I pressed for an immediate answer—yes or no. He said he would make inquiry of the clerk charged with that business and let me know. In the course of a few minutes he returned to the telephone and told me he would write me a letter. I hold that letter in my hand, and I send it to the desk to have it read, with the accompanying document, which may be printed but not read. It is simply a synopsis of the suits that have been brought and the dates in connection with them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1909.

Hon. BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN, U. S. S.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to our telephone conversation this morning, I beg to say that I find, on examination of the files of the department, that the suit in connection with the Coos Bay wagon-road grants was one of those which, as I told you, had been the subject of a difference of opinion between the special counsel engaged in these cases. A private suit has already been brought in connection with this matter, and the question arose whether the Government should intervene in this suit or should bring an independent suit. After careful consideration and a rather voluminous correspondence with the two special counsel, I decided that it would be better for the Government to bring an independent action without reference to the private suit already instituted. I therefore wrote sometime since to Mr. B. D. Townsend, and subsequently telegraphed him, directing that such suit should be brought as soon as practicable. The questions involved in the suit connected with the Coos Bay grant and several other contemplated suits of minor moment will be substantially determined by a decision in the case already instituted against the Harriman railroads which hold the Oregon and California land-grant titles; and it is deemed advisable by Mr. Townsend to bring to trial, if possible, the main suit, namely, that against the Harriman interests and involving the Oregon and California Railroad grants before these other far less important suits are tried. I agree with him to this extent, and, although, as above stated, I have ordered all the suits to be brought as soon as possible, I think no injury to the government interests has been caused by the delay in instituting proceedings in regard to the Coos Bay grants and a number of other matters.

I inclose you herewith, copied from the dockets of the department, a statement of the present situation of the main suit against the Harriman interests, the bill of complaint in which, as you will see, was filed September 4 last, as set forth in my statement of yesterday.

Respectfully,

CHARLES J. BONAPARTE,
Attorney-General.

The memoranda referred to are as follows:

Mr. TILLMAN. It follows, therefore, Mr. President, that up to this time, nearly a year—nine months anyway—nothing has been done in obeying the order of Congress to bring suit against the Southern Oregon Company. The motive which the Attorney-General assigns may be entirely satisfactory to some. We all know how slow the processes of law are, especially against millionaires; we all know how easy it is not to do a thing while pretending to be very anxious to do it; we are somewhat skilled in that art here in this body, and it is perhaps not permissible to criticise other departments of the Government for doing the same thing which we ourselves sometimes do. But the fact remains—and it is a cold fact—that the Attorney-General went into print to bolster up the President, to charge me in effect with not having talked to him on this particular subject, and took offense because I had made inquiry as to whether the suit for the lands which I had attempted to buy—no; not attempted, but wanted to buy; I never did attempt, except to write some letter and make some inquiries—the Attorney-General, I say, got offended, gave out an interview, denied my statement as far as he dared, and attempts to create the impression that he has obeyed the law, and to that degree has acted—I do not like to use the adjective; I will let you all fill it up.

Reverting for a moment to his statement, I want to call particular attention to the fact that in speaking about my public duty, of which he alone says he knew anything, and was not aware that I had any arrangement or any desire, that I hardly could have—I will not say "I could not," but I say I did not talk with him in that way. I was frank; I explained why I had become interested in Oregon lands. I had gone through the railroad lands and knew they were subject to the actual-settler clause. I had never given a moment's thought to buying any of them. I was trying to buy, or had been trying to buy, Coos Bay lands. I asked him—or put it in myself, I do not remember which—to incorporate the Southern Oregon Company in the proposed litigation. It is there, and to that extent we will let those who feel disposed to critically examine his attitude and my utterances last Monday make up their judgment after reading these new features of the controversy.

But Mr. Bonaparte is not the only Cabinet officer who has dipped into this business. On Tuesday the following statement appeared in the Washington Herald:

Senator TILLMAN, in the course of his speech yesterday, said that the President "has been in possession of all the facts in this case since July last, and men will be curious to know why, if his zeal was honest, he did not make them known then."

The Postmaster-General goes on to say:

Mr. Meyer's statement follows:

"The inspector's report is dated Portland, Oreg., July 27, 1908. It was received by the chief post-office inspector August 3, 1908. The case being an alleged violation of the 'fraud section' of the postal laws by Bryan R. Dorr"—

Here is a misstatement or a falsehood, one or the other. The case which was sent to the post-office inspectors was not the alleged violation of the postal laws by Bryan R. Dorr. That was merely an excuse for the investigation of TILLMAN, not of Dorr. The Postmaster-General goes on to give the dates—I suppose they are on the docket—of the papers.

It was sent to the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department August 5, 1908, for action. It was returned to the chief inspector September 3, 1908, with the recommendation that a fraud order be not issued, as it was not shown that Dorr was conducting a fraudulent business.

The matter was again referred to the Assistant Attorney-General on account of the receipt of a letter dated November 22, 1908, written by Dorr, in which he requested the department to furnish him with a copy of the inspector's report for publication, so as to clear him from imputation of fraud put upon him by Senator TILLMAN.

December 17, 1908, the report was handed to the Postmaster-General by the Assistant Attorney-General.

December 18, 1908, the case was brought to the attention of the President for the first time, and on the same date instructions by wire were sent to the inspectors who had made the investigation to procure either the original TILLMAN letters or photographs, in order that the inspector's statements as to Senator TILLMAN'S letters might be verified.

These proofs, presented by the inspectors in person, reached the President January 4. The investigations were made entirely by post-office inspectors, and the secret-service agents were in no way connected with the case.

In the post-office inspector's report, dated July 27, which is part of the exhibits in this case, occurs the following:

We traced this information concerning the application of Senator TILLMAN to secure some of this land-grant land through Shaefer & Conro to Reeder & Watkins, who produced the original letters and telegrams as their authority for the statements that had been made, and we inclose herewith compared copies of each. (See Exhibit C.)

The full verbatim copy, then, of my letters had been in the possession of the Post-Office Department as soon as the report made by the inspector reached that department last August.

The President, it is said, in December issued instructions to have photographs of the originals obtained, or to get the letters themselves. The effort is made to shield the President from any complicity in this investigation of a Senator until very recently. The Postmaster-General declares that the case was sent to the inspectors in Portland to investigate Dorr. The fact of the business is that I have letters from Dorr himself and from Dorr's father, and I had a visit from a man named McMullen, who was the president of the company of which Dorr was the agent out there, showing that the fraud order had been issued last February, immediately upon the showing which I had made to the inspector in my room; that it had been in force; that Dorr's mail had been withheld, and that, therefore, so far as Dorr was concerned there was nothing to investigate, for the proof had been overwhelming. The only thing that was in doubt in the mind of the President was what proof could he get on TILLMAN; and they may wiggle and squirm as often and as long as they choose, but they can not get away from the fact that they began to investigate me six or eight months ago, and then had all the evidence they ever did get, or can get.

The proof, as stated in Mr. Meyer's interview or statement, reached the President on January 4. The President sent in his special message January 5, showing how earnest and urgent he was to have a Senator haled before the country upon charges of dishonesty and of conduct unbecoming a Member of this body.

Mr. Meyer has said, upon his official responsibility, that they were investigating Dorr. I assert, and will prove if the opportunity is given, that they were not investigating Dorr, because they had already decided that he was a fraud and had issued a fraud order against him. Mr. Meyer's statement, therefore, is a direct and absolute falsehood to that extent.

I will mention here that yesterday evening Senator HALE, at my instance, telegraphed to Reeder & Watkins to know when and by whom photographic copies of the letters were made. Senator HALE tells me this morning that he has just received notice that the wires are down somewhere out there, and he can not get answer by telegram and he does not know when an answer will be received by letter. It may take two or three weeks, and everybody will lose all interest in it by that time. We can not verify that part of it at all, so we will let it go. I am simply trying to show that, so far as I am concerned, I want any and every phase of this subject investigated.

But there has come to me within the last week another Dorr circular, sent by some unknown friend in Philadelphia. This young man Dorr was reported last July as having gone out of business and gone to raising fruit. The post-office inspector so states in the official record here. There is somewhat of a pitiful letter from him sent in by the President, dated November 22, in which is made a plea for the removal of the stigma on his name and the restoration to him of the privilege of obtaining his mail; and on November 15, seven days before Mr. Dorr's letter of November 22, which, according to Mr. Meyer, the President never saw until December 18, Mr. Dorr sent broadcast throughout the country, to those whom he is trying to interest in his enterprises, the following circular—I will not read it all, but will ask to have it printed. After bragging and blowing in the usual exploiter's way in the effort to invite investors to cooperate with him and get a part of the good things he has going in Oregon, Mr. Dorr says:

All this I have done in the face of calumny, jealousy, and abuse. Some time ago I learned that a certain United States Senator was secretly interesting himself in western timber lands, while he was aiding in the prosecution of those claiming to be the rightful owners. When I made my information public, he denied it on the floor of the United States Senate and sought to ruin me. He failed. An investigation by the postal authorities soon cleared me and the matter was dropped; but not by me.

Here is a sentence to which I want Senators to listen:

Some day I shall have justice and reparation, and when that day comes, now not far distant, there will be a noise that will be heard around the world.

Does that bear any evidence—is it worth while for anybody to consider whether or not Dorr had seen the President or had been assured by the President, "if you will aid me in dragging TILLMAN down and proving him a liar and a scoundrel, I will expose him?" The noise to be heard around the world, which Dorr predicted on the 15th of November, its cause was sent in here, and the bomb was exploded last Friday. Yet two members of the Cabinet are endeavoring to have the people of this country and the Senate believe that Roosevelt is the most innocent, honest, noble, disinterested prosecutor of great malefactors that ever existed. Dorr says he is going to get revenge. Who could promise it to him two months or six weeks before the explosion? I will leave it to fair-minded people to decide for themselves.

I now ask that the Dorr circular, with the accompanying prospectus, or bait for suckers, be printed in the RECORD without reading. The prospectus is embellished by a number of well-executed and attractive cuts, designed to excite the imaginations of people whom it was desired to inveigle into the enterprise, which I am sorry I can not have reproduced in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, permission is granted.

The circular and prospectus referred to are as follows:

ST. PAUL AND PACIFIC TIMBER SYNDICATE,
White Salmon, Wash., November 15, 1908.

DEAR SIR: I hand you herewith a circular, which I urge you to read with care. It tells the story of what one young man has done, alone and unaided, in a single year, against obstacles and difficulties which seemed almost unsurmountable.

It has been a year of financial stringency; money has been very hard to raise; yet I have bought a fine mill for the corporation, and with the water rights and rights of way in my possession, control millions upon millions of feet of valuable timber, and, indirectly, the wonderful fruit land upon which it stands. This circular tells you what I have done, but it does not contain the most astounding truth of all, which is this: I have done it all by the sale of less than $4,000 worth of preferred stock; the balance is all in the treasury, unimpaired.

With this sum I have bought the fine mill, repaired and equipped it with additional machinery, doubled the capacity of the dam, built and equipped a mess house and a bunk house for the men, altered the interior construction of the mill so as to lessen the cost of handling the product, and have built the finest skid road in Klickitat County, if not in the entire State, thus enabling us to haul as many logs with one team as we were hauling before with three.

All this I have done in the face of calumny, jealousy, and abuse. Some time ago I learned that a certain United States Senator was secretly interesting himself in western timber lands while he was aiding in the prosecution of those claiming to be the rightful owners. When I made my information public, he denied it on the floor of the United States Senate and sought to ruin me. He failed. An investigation by the postal authorities soon cleared me and the matter was dropped; but not by me. Some day I shall have justice and reparation, and when that day comes, now not far distant, there will be a noise that will be heard around the world. All the hardships I have endured for the sake of this work to which I have set my hand will never be known. When money was needed at once I sold my own ranch, my home, and paid the bills.

I shall never give up, whether you come to my aid or not. I need you, and if you help me I shall be faithful to my trust, and shall reward you with a rich return.

I hereby guarantee that every statement I have made is absolutely and unequivocally the truth, and if anyone will come out here and find one false word I will give $1,000 and his expenses both ways.

Very truly, yours,

BRYAN R. DORR, President.

ST. PAUL AND PACIFIC TIMBER SYNDICATE.

(Major Creek sawmill.)

WHITE SALMON, WASH.

Officers: Bryan R. Dorr, president-treasurer; D. H. McMullen, vice-president; Harold M. Horton, secretary.

The St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate has "made good." It is probably the only lumber company in the world which has solved the problem of "eating its cake and keeping it, too." In other words, it has seized an opportunity to buy a profitable, up-to-date sawmill in the midst of a tract of land containing millions of feet of pine and fir timber, easily accessible to the Columbia River by means of a flume—land which, when cleared of its timber is worth more than ever before, being in the center of one of the most famous fruit-growing districts in the world.

In spite of hard times the corporation has paid regular dividends at the rate of 20 per cent per annum on its outstanding preferred stock. Best of all, its assets are over three times the amount which has been raised by the sale of the preferred stock. It has made steady progress in the face of opposition. A misunderstanding of its methods once led the postal authorities to make a thorough investigation of its affairs, and this investigation justified its every act and every statement and proved beyond a shadow of doubt the entire good faith of its management.

It is usually the case that when a tract of land has been denuded of its timber it is comparatively valueless and must be sold for a few dollars per acre or be allowed to revert to the State for unpaid taxes. The lumber business on the coast, on account of the large amount of standing timber and its low price per thousand feet, is of itself very profitable. Seldom, however, has it been possible to find a valuable tract of timber where the land when cut over is worth still more for agriculture.

In the wonderful White Salmon Valley, however, the St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate has found the opportunity for which it has been looking. Here in Washington, and across the noble Columbia River in Oregon, in a strip bounded on the north by Mount Adams and on the south by Mount Hood, is the most famous fruit district in the world. Hood River, Oreg., and White Salmon, Wash., are noted the world around for producing the finest apples and strawberries ever grown—apples which sell at from $2 to $8 per bushel box, according to the variety, and strawberries at $2 to $10 per crate, according to the date of shipment. It is not at all unusual for a bearing apple orchard to yield its owner an annual net profit of $500 to $1,000 per acre.

As a result, from all over the country homeseekers are pouring in to buy small tracts of land, which they are clearing and are setting out to orchard. In the White Salmon Valley it is possible to secure unimproved land at from $35 to $100 per acre, which, when cleared, improved and set to orchard, will in a few years yield its owner an income of from $250 to $1,000 per acre. Compared with the large ultimate return the cost of clearing the land is insignificant. The chief expense in clearing land consists of denuding the land of the magnificent fir and pine trees with which it is covered. To do this it is necessary to cut, pile, and burn the heavy underbrush, fell the trees, saw them into small logs, roll them into the swales or gulches with peavies or by means of a team of horses, skid them into huge piles and burn them. After that the stumps must be blown to pieces with dynamite and the pieces burned.

Up to the present time there has been no market whatever for these logs at White Salmon. As a result the more timber there is upon a tract of land the cheaper it may be secured per acre. If it were feasible to haul the logs to the Columbia River and float them down to Portland in rafts, they would sell at from $9 to $13 per thousand feet board measure. This is, however, impossible. The country is very mountainous and the roads are almost impassable with mud much of the year. The finest fruit and timber belt is at least 6 miles from the Columbia River, on a plateau nearly 2,000 feet high. The grade is such as to make the construction and operation of a steam railroad impracticable if not absolutely impossible. In short, there has thus far been no profitable means of disposing of the timber in clearing land, and so thousands of dollars' worth of the finest fir and pine in the world has been ruthlessly destroyed by fire every year. A small quantity is used for firewood, and an insignificant amount is manufactured into lumber to supply the local demand.

The St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate has found a means of utilizing this timber at a profit. If you will refer to any large map you will see that a stream known as "Major Creek" flows in a southeasterly direction into the Columbia River. Six miles north of the mouth is a prosperous sawmill which manufactures a very high grade of pine and fir lumber and sells it to residents in the valley. This mill has been purchased by the St. Paul and Pacific Timber Syndicate. We have also obtained the exclusive water right to Major Creek, and during the coming winter propose to construct a large water flume down the bed of the stream for its entire distance of 6 miles to the Columbia River. At the mouth of the stream we propose to build a large modern planing mill and a dry kiln. From this point we will ship lumber east and southeast, all over the United States, by way of the new Spokane, Portland and Seattle Railroad along the north bank of the Columbia River. This railroad is now in active operation as a branch of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railway systems. A short time ago the railroad sent one of their representatives, a competent civil engineer, to look over the mill, timber, and the route for the proposed flume, and he sent in a very favorable report. In consequence the railroad has agreed to put in a side track for our use, free of expense to us, as soon as the flume has been completed. But we are by no means confined solely to the use of this railroad in making shipments. The Columbia River enables us to ship by steam or sailing vessel to every port in the world, and the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, a branch of the Harriman lines, runs parallel to the new Spokane, Portland and Seattle Railroad along the south bank. By rafting our lumber across the river we may ship south, east, and west over this line to all points.

By means of the proposed flume it will be possible to send down from the sawmill an unlimited quantity of rough lumber, ties, slabs, and cord wood. In the planer and dry kiln at the mouth of the river we will finish the lumber and will establish our lumber yard at this point. In addition we will handle cord wood, for which there is a heavy demand in eastern Washington and Oregon, where there are vast irrigated districts absolutely devoid of timber. Cord wood may be manufactured here very cheaply from tops, from small second-growth fir, and from logs which are unsuitable for lumber, thus utilizing practically all the timber of every size on a tract of land.

When the timber has been entirely removed the land, as stated above, is worth more than before by an amount of $10 to $20 per acre. Land covered with heavy timber can be bought for $35 per acre. When the timber has been removed the land is worth $50 per acre and sells readily at this figure in any quantity. Indeed, many specific instances may be shown where men have been given timber free and in addition have been paid $25 to $50 per acre to fell the timber, remove it, and do whatever they pleased with it.

As an example of what may be done in this locality, a certain quarter section (160 acres) of timber in the vicinity of our sawmill is for sale at $35 per acre, land and timber being included at this price. The cost would therefore be $5,600. This quarter section contains over 4,000,000 feet of pine and yellow fir timber which will average about 40 per cent of No. 1 shop and clear lumber. In addition there will be about 1,500 cords of wood. The cost of land, logging, and manufacturing expense, sales and general expense, will be about as follows:

Logging expenses—4,000,000 feet logs, at $3.50 per M	14,000
Manufacturing, sales, general expenses, 4,000,000 feet, at $5 per M	20,000
1,500 cords wood, all expenses, $2.50 per cord	3,750
2,000 loads slab wood, cost 50 cents per load	1,000
	44,350

These 160 acres of land will yield the following returns:

1,600,000 feet No. 1 lumber, at $20 per M	32,000
2,400,000 feet No. 2 lumber, at $12.50 per M	30,000
1,500 cords of wood, at $7 per cord	10,500
2,000 loads slab wood, at $3 per load	6,000
160 acres of land, at $50 per acre	8,000
Gross returns	86,500
Cost	44,350
Net profit	42,150

This estimate shows a net profit of $42,150, or nearly 100 per cent on the transaction, and the figures used are very conservative. There is no limit until the entire district for a distance of 5 miles north of us has been cut over. No one can compete with us in the purchase of timber land, as we have obtained by law and by purchase the exclusive water right to Major Creek, the only stream large enough to be of any practical value for a flume, except the White Salmon River, which is 4 miles away, beyond a high range of foothills. We have, therefore, a virtual monopoly.

The corporation is composed of 3,000,000 shares of $1 each, 1,000,000 preferred shares and 2,000,000 common. The preferred shares are for sale at par, $1 per share, for cash or in installments of 10 per cent down and 5 per cent per month per share. During the sale of the first 100,000 shares a bonus or stock dividend of 50 shares of common stock will be issued free with each purchase of 100 preferred shares. The preferred stock is not issued in blocks of less than 100 shares.

The preferred stock has the following unusual features:

1. It receives every dollar of the profits in the form of dividends until it has been paid back to the holder in full, before the common stock receives a cent.

After it has been paid back in full at par, out of the sale of land, logs, or lumber, it shares equally with the common stock in all subsequent dividends.

The object of this unusual form of organization is to show the absolute faith on the part of the organizers in the enterprise. For their services they receive a suitable compensation in the form of common stock. But these common shares will not begin to participate in the profits until the preferred stockholders have been paid back in full. All their profits, therefore, are dependent upon the success of the enterprise; but they are confident not only that the preferred stockholders will soon be paid back in full, but that ever after both preferred and common stockholders will regularly receive heavy dividends.

We have placed upon the market 100,000 shares of the preferred stock for sale at par, $1 per share, with a free stock bonus of 50 per cent in common stock. The money received from the sale of this stock will be used for the following purposes:

1. Six-mile flume, $1,000 per mile	$6,000
2. New planing mill and dry kiln, Columbia River	14,000
3. Additional logging equipment, including donkey engines, horses, etc	10,000
4. Increase in capacity of sawmill	10,000
5. Purchase of timber land	60,000

The sawmill is already yielding a handsome profit on the money invested, sufficient to pay 20 per cent per annum on the preferred stock outstanding. Upon the completion of the proposed flume and the various projected improvements the dividend rate will undoubtedly be materially increased. Dividends are payable twice each year, in January and in July. The first dividend of 10 per cent was paid upon all preferred stock issued and outstanding on January 2, 1908. The second was paid July 1, 1908, amounting to 10 per cent. This amount was paid to all preferred stockholders of record on that date. The third is due and payable January 2, 1909, and will also amount to 10 per cent. Under our form of organization the organizers can not receive a cent of dividends until the preferred stockholders have been paid back in full.

If the earnings from operating the mill were all thrown back into improvements and the purchase of additional timber land, the company would, to be sure, achieve a steady and a healthy growth. But by making more rapid progress through the sale of additional stock it is possible to secure land and timber while it is still reasonable in price.

The rapid increase in the cost of land in this remarkable valley can hardly be appreciated. Government land which ten years ago was open for settlement under the homestead laws has been patented and resold at $10, $20, $50, and $100 per acre. The end is not yet in sight. Across the Columbia, in Hood River, raw land sells at $250 per acre and more.

Since purchasing the sawmill we have been steadily improving the plant with a view toward increasing its output and efficiency. We have installed new machinery which, at practically the same cost, increases the output, and therefore the net returns, by over 25 per cent. It is estimated that the net profits will by these improvements alone be increased nearly 50 per cent. We have doubled the capacity of the dam, which will now accommodate 500,000 feet of logs at one time. We have constructed a skidway, which decreases the cost of logging by 50 per cent. We have nearly completed a new mess house and a bunk house for the men at the mill, are installing telephones, and in every way are endeavoring to make our plant the most up-to-date on the coast. There is the enormous demand for box material for the packing of apples, cherries, pears, strawberries, prunes, and fruit of all sorts, and the quantity of yellow pine and white fir for this purpose is almost unlimited. As soon as we have raised the necessary capital, we propose to include a thoroughly modern box factory with our plant, and there is no competition in the entire valley. We can ship box material to Hood River and up and down the Columbia and Willamette valleys and dispose of every kind of board we manufacture.

The officers and directors are drawing no salaries from the treasury of the company. Every dollar the plant earns, except what is applied as dividends on the preferred stock, is going back into improvements, with the idea of disposing of no more stock than is absolutely necessary to carry out the contemplated extensions.

We do not ask you to take our word for what we are doing. Write to either of the leading papers of the valley—the Bingen Observer, Bingen, Wash., or the Enterprise, White Salmon, Wash., inclosing a stamp. If this is not enough, write to Van Vorst & Wells, attorneys at law, White Salmon; McClintock & Simpson, hardware merchants, White Salmon; or to the White Salmon Valley Bank. All of these are familiar with our operations and are heartily in sympathy with us and our great work in the development of the valley.

We are operating under the name of the "Major Creek Sawmill," as this name is shorter and more convenient for general business purposes.

As an investment opportunity we believe that the preferred stock of this corporation is unsurpassed. It contains all the elements of a safe and profitable investment; it deals with a staple commodity, for which the demand increases year by year, while the supply decreases. The risks and hazards of mining have all been eliminated; there is no possibility of loss—all is above ground and may be estimated in advance. Dividends are already being earned and paid, and the coming years will see their rapid increase. We wish you to join us, and accordingly solicit your subscription on the inclosed order blank. We trust you will fill it out and mail it to us with your remittance at once.

BRYAN R. DORR, President.

Mr. TILLMAN. In the face of this man's previous record, and the previous circular, which was printed in the RECORD last February, showing positively that he lied when he said I had made application and paid any fees, I ask Senators to weigh and consider the various aspects of the case to determine for themselves who is the innocent man here, or the man involved, and who is the guilty one—Theodore Roosevelt or BEN TILLMAN.

In looking at the language of the Postmaster-General and of the Attorney-General, together with their actions and the facts, I have been led to refresh my memory by reading in As You Like It the analysis of the lie. I had it copied, and I know all who have read it—and that means practically every person in this room—will enjoy having the perfume of the work of the great Bard of Avon come under their nostrils for a moment. I quote from Shakespeare's As You Like It, Act V, Scene IV:

Touchstone. If any man doubt that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flattered a lady; I have been politic with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three tailors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.

Jaques. And how was that ta'en up?

Touchstone. 'Faith, we met, and found the quarrel was upon the seventh cause.

Jaques. But, for the seventh cause; how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Touchstone. Upon a lie seven times removed—bear your body more seeming, Audrey—as thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard: he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the "retort courteous." If I sent him word again, it was not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the "quip modest." If again, it was not well cut, he disabled my judgment: this is called the "reply churlish." If again, it was not well cut, he would answer, I spake not true: this is called the "reproof valiant." If again, it was not well cut, he would say, I lied: this is called the "countercheck quarrelsome:" and so to the "lie circumstantial," and the "lie direct."

Jaques. And how oft did you say, his beard was not well cut?

Touchstone. I durst go no further than the "lie circumstantial," nor he durst not give me the "lie direct," and so we measured swords, and parted.

Jaques. Can you nominate in order now the degrees of the lie?

Touchstone. O sir, we quarrel in print, by the book, as you have books for good manners: I will name you the degrees. The first, the retort courteous; the second, the quip modest; the third, the reply churlish; the fourth, the reproof valiant; the fifth, the countercheck quarrelsome; the sixth, the lie with circumstance; the seventh, the lie direct. All these you may avoid, but the lie direct; and you may avoid that too, with an if. I knew when seven justices could not take up a quarrel; but when the parties were met themselves, one of them thought but of an if, as If you said so, then I said so; and they shook hands and swore brothers. Your if is the only peace-maker; much virtue in if.

I will not use any ifs this morning with respect to how much and what degree of falsehood has been indulged in by the two Cabinet officers or heads of departments or head clerks or bootlicks or flatterers or whatever other relationship exists between the President and those he has around him. Seeing the earnestness with which the Postmaster-General seeks to fortify his chief, seeing the sly way in which the Attorney-General sought to convey the impression that he had the law enforced, and that I could have found out about it in an hour, analyzing his statements in regard to what I said to him and the particularity with which he remembered what I said, "We might as well give it to them, because we give them about everything else; because they would have it after a while." Everything is in quotation, by memory, but he could not even recollect whether he had brought suit or not. He had to go to a subordinate to know whether this important duty imposed upon him by Congress had been performed. So I am not able just now to locate in the Ananias Club the degree to which these two distinguished gentlemen shall be entitled. I will, after consultation with some of the other leading members of that association or organization or whatever it is called, try to get a meeting of the executive committee and have William E. Chandler or some other analytical mind determine just what degree we shall confer upon Charles J. Bonaparte and this man Meyer.

Mr. President, as showing the efforts I made to get at the facts, I remember having written to the Interior Department last December to find out about the status of the Roseburg and Coos Bay land grant. I obtained a communication from Mr. Ballinger, Commissioner of Public Lands, giving a statement as to the number of acres which had been patented to that company in 1875, 1876, and 1887. I find that, in all, they have 105,000 acres patented. So zealous were they in Congress and out, so anxious to do away with the Government's title and confer it upon these men, who were then absorbing and had obtained, under the act of Congress of 1868, those valuable timber and coal lands, that they actually issued patents for 5,300 acres in excess of what they were entitled to.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1907.

In re Coos Bay wagon road lands.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
U. S. Senate, City.

SIR: Replying to your letter of the 14th instant, I have to say that patents have issued to the Coos Bay Wagon Road Company in Oregon as follows:

	Acres.
No. 1. February 12, 1875, covering	42,496.93
No. 2. March 18, 1876, covering	1,080.00
No. 3. November 8, 1876, covering	61,111.53
No. 4. March 24, 1877, covering	431.65
Total	105,120.11

The area of the grant to said company being 99,819.35 acres, it appears that the excess patented to the company is 5,300.76 acres. Of this amount 1,099.59 acres were found to lie outside the limits of the grant, and suit instituted for the recovery thereof resulted in a final decree in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon awarding to the United States the sum of $1,099.59 in payment for such land. Of the remaining 4,201.17 acres patented in excess as aforesaid, I have to say that the lands having been patented as above, no specific tracts can be designated as the "excess" except possibly the 431.66 acres embraced in Patent No. 4 and 3,769.52 acres of the lands embraced in Patent No. 3 not required in satisfaction of the grant. As far back as 1897 this office recommended suit for the recovery of the excess patented to the company and prepared a list of such lands, basing it upon the theory that the lands farthest from the line of the road constituted the excess, but in this the Acting Attorney-General did not entirely concur, and this office has no official information as to whether the suit was ever instituted.

Very respectfully,

R. A. BALLINGER,
Commissioner.

I think it well worth the attention of the Committee on Public Lands to make inquiry—or I will have to offer a resolution here—to know whether these people still hold the 4,201 acres and whether any suit was ever brought; and if not, why not.

I have here in addition the correspondence taken from my stenographer's books and my letter files between myself and Russell R. Dorr, the father of young Dorr. He promised to have his son make restitution to those whom he had swindled and to act as a clean, honorable man, in which case I promised to join in an application to the Post-Office Department to remove the fraud order which had been issued against him. This proves conclusively that the fraud order had been issued and was in existence when Meyer said that the investigation was instituted to see about it.

ST. PAUL, MINN., February 21, 1908.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to hand you herewith clipping from the St. Paul Dispatch, of February 20, with my reply to the same, which appears in to-night's issue. Will you kindly let me know whether or not you are correctly quoted in the issue of February 20, and greatly oblige?

Very respectfully, yours,

RUSSELL R. DORR.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1908.

Mr. RUSSELL R. DORR,
512 New York Life Building, St. Paul, Minn.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of February 21, with inclosed clippings, I send you a page cut from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which will let you see just what I said in the Senate and why I said it. Your son may not be a swindler, but he has certainly been imposed upon or is a liar himself, one or the other. I have not bought any land, and no man can buy any until the courts settle the question as to the Pacific land grants. I also inclose a joint resolution, which I introduced and which passed the Senate, relating to this land, and a letter from the President giving the full history of the land grants in Oregon, some of which is advertised for sale by your son. I wanted to buy some of the land, but found I could get no title and that no one else can get any. If your son is an honorable man, he will refund the money he has got out of other people and quit the business.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. TILLMAN.

ST. PAUL, MINN., March 2, 1908.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, with your favor of February 24, in which you say, among other things, that my son may not be a swindler, but that he has either been imposed upon or is a liar. Knowing that he is neither a swindler nor a liar, I will compromise with you on the ground that he may have been imposed upon. I am further willing to admit that one of his natural peculiarities is impulsiveness, and that the case in point is possibly an evidence of it. However, that is ordinarily a fault of the head rather than of the heart; and it may not be irrelevant to say that even Presidents and Senators with maturer judgment and much wider experience have suffered under the same charge within very recent years. And I further suggest that, with my son's business broken up and his character publicly assailed, what he has already suffered and must yet suffer is a sufficient penalty for an indiscretion committed in good faith and with no unlawful intent.

With you, Mr. Senator, I have no personal controversy, and desire none. I am concerned only with the vindication of the honor and integrity of my son. I am convinced that the statements contained in the circular letter were made in good faith and under the supposition that they were true and of general public knowledge. If the contrary is the fact, you should be relieved by a specific retraction.

I do not question your motives in the manner or form of your denial; but from your commanding position upon the floor of the Senate your voice was heard from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and my son, who had no protection or defense except such as his father could supply, was instantaneously branded by the Post-Office Department and the Associated Press as a swindler and a crook, when he was neither the one nor the other. Such hasty and arbitrary action as that might be anticipated in Russia or Bulgaria, but I do not recall another similar instance in the United States. In this country the presumption is that the only legally constituted body having authority to bring an indictment without giving the accused an opportunity to explain or defend is the grand jury.

I am to-day advised by telegraph from Washington that the fraud order will be revoked upon satisfactory "proof of lawful intentions" on my son's part. Hoping that the information is correct, I would esteem it a favor to be advised as to the nature and character of the required proof. I submit to you herewith a copy of the frank and manly communication of my son to the honorable Postmaster-General, under date of February 21. To my mind—and I have endeavored to consider it from a disinterested standpoint—it is in itself as ample evidence of sincerity and of "lawful intention" as could be furnished. I hardly see how it could be strengthened except by the quite unnecessary formality of an oath. In connection therewith I desire to call your attention to the fact that this Coos Bay wagon grant matter was entirely an incidental side issue, independent of the main purpose of the Syndicate Timber Company, that only four orders were received, and that my son placed the money therefrom in the bank as trustee fo rthe syndicate. If he had had the remotest purpose to defraud, he would have put the money in his pocket instead of in the bank as trustee. Swindlers do not pursue that course.

Under date of February 21 my son writes me as follows:

"The Government has passed a fraud order against me on account of the circulars about the Coos Bay wagon road grant. * * * I had no intention of deceiving or defrauding anyone, and am still of the opinion that it was a good business venture for anyone who applied, considering the large profits in case of the successful outcome of the suit. Whether I am able to clear myself or not, it is a very serious matter and has come like a cloud out of a clear sky. But I care more about the fact that your name can not help being touched, too, and that you are worrying and suffering and grieving on my account. * * * I do not ask your help or aid; indeed, there is nothing you could do as far as I can see; my goose is cooked in a business way, and that settles it. I may have to begin life over again somewhere else, * * * and probably it will have to be on a farm, or in the woods. But I am not going to run away from my prosecutors anyway."

I had made a personal appeal to the President, and have communicated with Senator Proctor, Hon. Wendell P. Stafford, of the supreme court of the District of Columbia; Senator CLAPP, and Congressman STEVENS, of Minnesota, and I further ask for your concurrence in the immediate revocation of the fraud order, so that my son may proceed as best he can under these trying circumstances with the business of the corporation and clear his name from the stigma that has been cast upon it.

Very respectfully, yours,

RUSSELL R. DORR.

MORE ABOUT THE COOS BAY WAGON ROAD GRANT.

ST. PAUL AND PACIFIC TIMBER SYNDICATE,
Portland, Oreg., February 18.

DEAR SIR: Your last opportunity to join in this suit against the Southern Oregon Company will expire March 1. The suit is now pending in the United States district court, and Senator TILLMAN is one of the plaintiffs. I urge you to act without further delay, as this opportunity is absolutely unparalleled. Prominent men from here are joining us every day, such as H. C. Wortman, leading merchant, of Olds, Wortman & King; Louis P. Reno, of Reno & Ballis, manufacturers; C. J. Allen, retired capitalist; E. B. MacFarland, of the MacFarland Investment Company; F. O. Northrup, real estate; and George J. Schaefer, real estate, Portland and Coos Bay. All are confident of success, and the list will positively be closed on March 1.

There is, in my opinion, absolutely no tenable ground upon which the Southern Oregon Company can defend its title to this property. But even if it had an even chance of winning, would it not be good business for you to risk $200 to win $5,000 or more? "Pitchfork" TILLMAN is reputed to be the most aggressive man in the United States Senate, and is in a position to force matters to an immediate issue. If he is willing to take ten claims and spend his own money, time, and energy over the matter, are you not willing to come in to the extent of $200? Do not hesitate to use the wire at our expense when ordering.

Very truly, yours,

BRYAN R. DORR, President.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., March 5, 1908.

Mr. RUSSELL R. DORR,
512 New York Life Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of March 2. Since writing you last I have had two calls from Mr. McMillen, representing himself as a friend and associate of yours, and have talked over the whole matter with him. He declared it to be the purpose of the timber syndicate to make good by repayment all of the moneys received by your son, and I told him I would ask the Post-Office Department to withdraw the fraud order upon satisfactory proof that there was no intention to defraud and that all persons who had been induced to send money by the untruthful circulars had been reimbursed. It is not worth while for us to dispute over the matter of motive or integrity of purpose. I was made angry by the unwarranted use of my name in furtherance of what I considered a swindle, and I took prompt action to correct it, both in the Senate and at the Post-Office Department. If your son carries out the promises made by McMillen and I am furnished the evidence to that effect, I will do what I agreed to do.

Very truly, yours,

B. R. TILLMAN.

ST. PAUL AND PACIFIC TIMBER SYNDICATE,
Portland, Oreg., February 21, 1907.

Hon. SENATOR TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I learn to-day that a fraud order has been issued against me for using your name in connection with circulars which I sent out a few days ago relative to the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant. I am to-day writing the Postmaster-General with full information as to the facts which led me to suppose you were associated with the suit in equity which has just been filed. I assure you that no fraud was intended by this proposition of mine, and I was simply acting as agent for other parties, who had been handling the same proposition ever since last October. If any fraud can be shown, I will gladly return the amount sent in by the few applicants who have already sent in their names, as I am the last person who would attempt to succeed by fraud. I feel that it was unjust to stop my mail before giving me an opportunity to make a full answer to the charges, and I am sure that you will agree with me in this respect upon further investigation. My name, my reputation, and my future prospects have been ruined, or at least seriously blighted, by this affair, and even when it is shown that I am not at fault in the matter the stigma will never be entirely removed.

I regret exceedingly that your name was used without your authorization, and I assure you that it would not have been used had not I supposed that the facts stated were matters of general report. I had reason to suppose that my authority was conclusive, and I got my informant to put the statements in writing only a day or two ago, when I began to have doubts as to their authenticity, after learning of your speech on the floor of the Senate. Can you not use your influence to have the fraud order against me rescinded?

Very respectfully, yours,

BRYAN R. DORR.

From time to time I may be called on to intrude this land matter upon the Senate. I am not uneasy about it; I sleep well every night; but it seems to me it is getting high time for either an investigation or a vindication. I do not want to rush the Senate unduly to pass any resolution. We as a body have been advertised throughout the length and breadth of this land, in some papers, for years—the whole of us—officially, others as individuals, as a lot of scoundrels and tools of millionaires and corporations, caring for our own interests rather than those of the people. A great deal of this has emanated directly from the White House. I do not want anybody to be able to say that the President proved TILLMAN to be a liar and to be interested in legislation which would enable him to make money. I could have obtained but 1,440 acres, while the interests involved in the resolution which was passed, in the law enacted at my initiative, embraced over 2,100,000 acres of land. I do not know what per cent that is—1,440 against 2,100,000 acres. But if Roosevelt or anybody else in official life has no more percentage of the rascal in him than that, he will be prepared to sit alongside of St. Peter, if he should ever reach the golden gate.

I do not want anybody to say that the Senate is in a hurry to whitewash TILLMAN. TILLMAN wants the Senate, in its own good way, to search out the facts and determine whether or not there is a scintilla of justification for or foundation in Roosevelt's charges. I courted it in my speech. I demanded it. I realize that if the Senate goes about the business of investigating every charge that is sent around and published against members of this body, we will do nothing but investigate each other. It is only because the President of the United States is a prosecutor in this case that I feel any concern to have it settled. But I submit to you, gentlemen, that it is nothing but right, if you are not satisfied with the showing I have made, to investigate. I am prepared to go on the stand and produce the few witnesses I want called. If you are satisfied, it is due you, as well as it is due me, that something be done without having it dawdle along here until the impression becomes fixed in the minds of the people of the country that I am guilty, but you are afraid to investigate and you are slow to vindicate. Do whatever you see fit to do, but do something.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 8451) granting an increase of pension to Edward H. Richards, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BURNHAM introduced a bill (S. 8452) granting an increase of pension to William M. Clapp, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill (S. 8453) granting a pension to Frances L. Haha, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 8454) for the relief of Daniel M. Frost, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HALE introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 8455) granting an increase of pension to Darius S. Sanborn; and

A bill (S. 8456) granting a pension to Mary Bradford Crowninshield.

Mr. CLAPP introduced a bill (S. 8457) granting a pension to Joshua Foster, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BEVERIDGE introduced a bill (S. 8458) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Lucas, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 8459) granting an increase of pension to James H. Shippee, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 8460) to provide for the deduction of hatchways and water-ballast space from the gross tonnage of vessels, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BULKELEY submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for appliances other than artificial limbs for disabled soldiers, Medical Corps, U. S. Army, from $2,000 to $10,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming submitted an amendment providing that jurors and witnesses in United States courts in the Territory of Hawaii shall receive the same compensation for mileage and attendance as is now provided by law for jurors and witnesses in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DICK submitted an amendment providing that on and after July 1, 1909, the compensation of the messengers employed in the United States Senate shall be $1,800 per annum, intended to proposed by him to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $29,000 for the construction of a trunk sewer in the subdivision of North Columbia Heights, D. C., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. RAYNER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, commonly called the "omnibus claims bill," which was ordered to be printed and, with the accompanying paper, ordered to lie on the table.

JAMES AND WILLIAM CROOKS.

Mr. CLAPP submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 250), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Court of Claims be requested to return to the Senate the papers and Senate bill No. 3717, which was heretofore referred to said Court of Claims for findings of fact.

IMPROVEMENT OF SABINE PASS, TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON. At the request of the Member of the House of Representatives from the district in which the waterway is situated, I offer a concurrent resolution, and ask its reference to the Committee on Commerce. I have not yet had an opportunity to examine the matter in person.

The resolution (S. C. Res. 69) was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of the jetties and channel of Sabine Pass, in the State of Texas, from the 30-foot contour beyond the bar at the entrance to said Sabine Pass to and including the turning basin at Port Arthur, with a view to widening the channel and the Port Arthur ship canal to 200 feet at bottom and increasing the depth thereof and of the turning basin to 30 feet at mean low Gulf tide, together with the extension of the walls of the existing jetties to the 30-foot contour, and to submit estimates for such improvements.

2. That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, also authorized and directed to cause to be made an examination and survey of Taylors Bayou and the lumber slip adjacent thereto, with the view of removing the narrow strip of land separating Taylors Bayou and lumber slip and the deepening of said Taylors Bayou and lumber slip for a length of 2,500 feet to a depth of 30 feet.

LOCOMOTIVE-BOILER EXPLOSIONS.

Mr. BURKETT. I offer a resolution and ask for its present consideration. It merely calls for information.

The resolution (S. Res. 249) was read and considered by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be, and it hereby is, directed to send to the Senate a statement showing the number of railroad employees and other persons killed and injured and the value of property destroyed as a result of locomotive-boiler explosions for each year since July 31, 1903.

Mr. KEAN. Let me ask the Senator from Nebraska whether that is not required by statute at present?

Mr. BURKETT. It is not. They have it compiled, but we have not the information here.

Mr. KEAN. Is it not required by statute to be sent to Congress every year?

Mr. BURKETT. I think not. I think it is not required to be sent here.

Mr. KEAN. Is it not in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. BURKETT. It is not included in the list of accidents.

Mr. KEAN. I have no objection to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAN FRANCISCO BAY, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 63, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the bar of San Francisco Bay, in the State of California, to confirm the depths shown on the charts of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and to cause estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the North, or Bonita, Channel by the removal of Centissima and Sears rocks, and report the same to Congress.

IMPROVEMENT OF OAKLAND HARBOR, CALIFORNIA.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred Senate concurrent resolution No. 64, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be made a resurvey of Oakland Harbor, Alameda County, Cal., with a view of improving the same to meet the present and future demands of commerce, and to submit estimates of cost of the following three projects: Project No. 1: A channel 700 to 800 feet wide and 25 feet deep from San Francisco Bay to the foot of Tenth avenue extended, thence around Brooklyn Basin 500 to 700 feet wide and 25 feet deep at low tide. Project No. 2: Same as project 1, except that depth be 30 feet at low tide. Project No. 3: Same as projects Nos. 1 and 2, except that the whole of Brooklyn Basin be dredged to pierhead line at a uniform depth of 25 or 30 feet at low tide.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 216. Joint resolution for a special "Lincoln" postage stamp was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION AT TOKYO, JAPAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 658), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In pursuance of the requirement of section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 22, 1908, providing "for the participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," I transmit herewith a copy of a detailed statement of expenditures made to December 31, 1908, by the commissioners-general appointed under the act.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1909.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 657), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State, covering one from the commissioners-general of the United States to the Tokyo Exposition of 1912, made in pursuance of the requirements of section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 22, 1908, providing for "the participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1909.

PROTECTION OF HARBOR AT SAN PEDRO, CAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 656), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the following paragraph in the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1908,

"The Secretary of War is directed, by a suitable board, to investigate and report fully to Congress as to the advisability and necessity of seacoast fortifications for the protection of the harbor at San Pedro, Cal., and the cities in that vicinity, and if such fortifications are deemed advisable or necessary, to furnish an estimate of the cost of sites and fortifications separately,"

I transmit the accompanying communication from the Secretary of War submitting the information called for.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1909.

PORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. DIXON. I report back from the Committee on Indian Affairs favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 8439) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise lands in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., and grant the same to the Great Northern Railway, and I submit a report (No. 763) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I simply desire to state that while I will not make any objection to the consideration of the pending bill, I can not consent that much more time shall be taken up in the consideration of bills this morning, because I must ask that the special order be taken up.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HUNTLEY IRRIGATION PROJECT, MONTANA.

Mr. DIXON. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 8357) to extend the time for disposing of lands on the Huntley project within the ceded Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 762) thereon.

I should like, under the emergency of the case, to ask for the present consideration of this short bill. I will say for the information of the Senator from Oregon that one of the large irrigation projects was constructed on this reservation. The five-year period will expire in April, and if this legislation is not had several thousand acres will be thrown upon the market.

Mr. FULTON. It is a very short bill, the Senator says.

Mr. DIXON. It is a bill of about ten lines, and under the emergency of the case, I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any of the lands withdrawn under the reclamation act in pursuance of the provisions of section 5 of the act of Congress approved April 27, 1904, entitled "An act to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians of the Crow Reservation, in Montana, and making appropriations to carry the same into effect," which are not disposed of within five years from the date of the passage of said act shall remain subject to disposal under the provisions of the reclamation act until otherwise directed by the Secretary of the Interior.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate House bill 15372, the "omnibus claims bill," so called.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and "Tucker" acts.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is on page 40, line 14.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. KEAN. I have not heard any 40 pages of the bill read yet.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. KEAN. I said I had not heard 40 pages of the bill read as yet.

Mr. FULTON. There were some 39 pages of the bill read. The reading of the bill was begun at the last session and proceeded with thus far.

Mr. KEAN. So I remember.

Mr. ALDRICH. Upon what order is the bill being proceeded with?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under a unanimous-consent agreement made on the 4th of January.

Mr. ALDRICH. I mean, what is the status of the bill now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is being read for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. ALDRICH. Under an order of the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under an order of the Senate.

Mr. ALDRICH. Is that order available so that it can be called to the attention of the Senate?

Mr. FULTON. The order was made at the last session when the bill was called up.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to know the precise terms of it.

Mr. BULKELEY. I should like to know if other amendments than committee amendments are in order at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island has asked for the text of the agreement under which the bill is taken up.

Mr. BULKELEY. I beg pardon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Oregon the date when he made his original request for unanimous consent? The original request was modified on the 4th of January.

Mr. FULTON. That is, at the present session.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island desires the text of the original agreement. The Chair does not have it before it.

Mr. FULTON. I have not the date, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon recollect the date when he made the request?

Mr. FULTON. Does the Chair refer to the date when the bill was first brought before the Senate at the last session or the present session?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The date when the unanimous consent was given to make it the special order of business on Wednesday, January 6.

Mr. FULTON. I do not recall the date. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] advises me that it was on the 16th of December. I will state to the Chair, however, if I may be permitted, that at that time there was no order taken as to the course of proceeding in considering the bill. The only order taken was at the last session of Congress when the bill was up for consideration.

I ask, as a parliamentary inquiry, whether under our unanimous agreement to proceed with the bill we would not proceed along the same lines and under the same agreement under which the bill was originally taken up?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the terms of the later unanimous-consent agreement, unless in conflict with the terms of the original agreement, under which the consideration of the bill was taken up, would not modify the original terms. The Chair finds a memorandum on the bill, dated March 19, 1908, as follows:

Agreement on March 19, 1908, that the bill be read for amendment, the committee amendments to be first considered.

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has not the RECORD at hand, and is not advised as to whether there has been any subsequent modification of that agreement.

Mr. FULTON. There has been none.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is under the impression that there has been no modification. The Chair will state further, for the information of the Senate, that May 22, 1908, the reading of the bill reached line 14, page 40, and that the question now is upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] to the amendment of the committee, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, line 14, in the proposed committee amendment, after the word "Arkansas," insert the words "four thousand," so that if amended the paragraph will read:

To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, Clarksville, Ark., $4,400.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have some explanation of the amendment to the amendment. I see that as the bill was reported the committee proposed the payment of $400.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, if the question of consideration has been settled, I will make an announcement in connection with the amendment to the amendment and then withdraw it.

I understand the Committee on Claims have made a fair estimate of what they thought can be enacted into law as to the amounts and as to the particular character of the claims to be considered. I feel satisfied that the committee has acted for the best interest in the light of the present state of the revenue and the amount of appropriation necessary to incorporate in the bill at this time.

This particular claim is just for the entire amount if it is just for any part of it. This Methodist Church at Clarksville, Ark., was used by the federal forces for a commissary shelter or place of deposit for stores, and upon the approach of the enemy it was destroyed in order to prevent the stores from falling into the hands of the Confederate forces that were approaching.

The committee saw proper to allow $400 with a finding of $4,400 by the Court of Claims. I thought I would submit to the Senate the question as to whether or not there was any foundation for making that sort of a deduction from the amount of the claim. I have a number of other claims which were adjudicated as to their validity by the Court of Claims that would follow in the event this particular amendment was adopted. I withdraw it now, with the distinct understanding that in accepting $400 as provided for in the bill I shall not in any wise prejudice the right in future on some other occasion to present this case as it would be presented now. With the distinct understanding that in the acceptance of this amount we do not preclude ourselves from making that claim, nor are we to be met with an estoppel at that time when it shall hereafter be presented, I withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas withdraws the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ALDRICH. When the bill was last before the Senate—I think the Senator from Oregon was absent—I sought some information as to how many claims were in existence within the knowledge of the committee similar to the claims that are covered by the bill. These are largely war claims, and this is now the year 1909. The war closed in 1865. This bill carries many millions of dollars. I have supposed that at some time in the course of the history of this country we would reach an end to war claims; but our experience has been that year after year these claims increase in amount and increase in number. There should be a limit fixed somewhere when we shall stop the payment of this kind of claims.

I am not criticising the action of the committee at all in the presentation of the bill, but I think the committee owe it to the Senate to make a statement, if they can, of approximately the amount of the unsettled claims and approximately the time within which these claims shall be closed.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, before he takes his seat, if it is not a fact that under the existing laws these claims are barred and only have a standing here by the action of the committee?

Mr. ALDRICH. I am not sure about that.

Mr. FULTON. In the first place, Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that he is mistaken about my having been absent the last time the bill was before the Senate. I have been here during all the time the bill has been before the Senate. The Senator was possibly not present himself when I made the statement when the bill was first taken up for consideration.

I can not undertake even to estimate the number of claims of this character that are still pending before Congress and before the courts. There are hundreds of them, and I suppose I would be justified in saying thousands.

I fully concur in what the Senator has said, that there should be some time in the history of this country when we shall cease paying this character of claims. I, myself, think the time has arrived, and I have advocated a change of the existing law under which these claims appear before the Senate in this bill.

In answer to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] I will say it is true that, so far as any right to present these matters is concerned, they are barred, because there was a statute passed some years ago that limited the time in which claims of this character should be recognized. I do not remember just the date of that statute, but it was many years ago. The bills were continually brought before the Senate, and finally provision was made in the Tucker Act, whereby they might be referred to the Court of Claims for findings. The court was directed to report whether or not any facts were shown in evidence that would tend to excuse the delay in presenting the claims to Congress. They usually find some excuse, and the court usually reports some excuse. As a result these claims come back in large numbers, and the findings apparently are in favor of the claimant, and there is no way to question the verity of them.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, I think that the sending of claims of this character to the Court of Claims should cease. I have proposed to amend the Tucker Act by repealing the section of it under which these claims are sent to the Court of Claims, because when what we call a "war claim" goes down before the Court of Claims the Government is practically helpless on the question of loyalty and, indeed, on every other question. The claimant will introduce some character of testimony, some aged person swearing that he knew the claimant or the ancestor of the claimant, and that he was loyal. There is no way to meet that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. In just a second. I say there is no way to meet that character of testimony, because it is so far away from the scene of action. I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest, with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. There is but one amendment to be offered by me to be disposed of in connection with the pending bill. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to know where I am left.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator was cut off by the expiration of the morning hour. The Senator from Montana proposes an amendment. Does the Senator withdraw the pending amendment?

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw the pending amendment and offer this amendment in lieu of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana withdraws the pending amendment and proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 5 strike out all of section 7, and in lieu thereof insert:

SEC. 7. That interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum shall be allowed and entered in the pass book to the credit of each depositor once in each year, the same to be computed on such basis and under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe, but interest shall not be computed or allowed on any amount less than $1 or some multiple thereof: Provided, That the balance to the credit of any one person shall never be allowed to exceed $500, exclusive of accumulated interest.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CARTER. For a question.

Mr. TILLMAN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina rises to a parliamentary inquiry. He will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TILLMAN. We had the omnibus claims bill before us, and there was a discussion going on between several Senators as to some proposed amendment. Two o'clock having arrived, the unfinished business was laid before the Senate. That necessarily, I suppose, lays the other bill on Senators' desks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The omnibus claims bill was before the Senate under a unanimous-consent agreement, which expressly provided that it should not interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills and the unfinished business.

Mr. TILLMAN. Then the omnibus claims bill is laid aside?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is laid aside.

Mr. TILLMAN. I just wanted to know where we were all left.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana will proceed.

Mr. CARTER. The substitute I offer for section 7 is presented because of considerable discussion and some objection to the basis upon which interest should be computed on postal savings.

The bill as originally reported to the Senate provided that interest should be computed on the average balance of each quarter of a year. It was suggested that computation on a basis of quarterly balances would involve too much clerical labor. In order to meet that objection the amendment, which was pending a few moments ago and by me withdrawn, proposed to compute interest upon the basis of the average semiannual balance. In the course of the discussion it developed that many Senators regarded this basis as unjust to the depositor. An instance was cited where a person might make a deposit upon the 2d or 3d of January, which deposit would not begin to draw interest until the first day of the fiscal year, to wit, the 1st of the following July. There seemed to be much merit in this suggestion, and it led me to prepare the amendment which has just been read. This amendment provides—

That interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum shall be allowed and entered in the pass book to the credit of the depositor once in each year, the same to be computed on such basis and under such rules and regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

I believe if the Postmaster-General ascertains that the burden of clerical work will not be too great he will provide for computation upon a basis of monthly average. If, however, that is found impracticable, then resort may be had to computation on the basis of the average quarterly balance to the credit of the depositor; and if in the last analysis it is found that this period of time is too short and that in consequence the clerical work is too great, the half-yearly basis will be imposed.

I assume that the executive officer in charge of the administration of the law will seek to do justice to the depositors in so far as possible, considering the clerical work connected with the computation and entries of credits to the depositor from time to time.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. HOPKINS. As I understand, Mr. President, the purpose of the bill is not to come in competition with savings banks and banks that pay interest on deposits, and this amendment that is now being debated should not be so construed by the Postmaster-General as to make it an object to depositors in banks to go to one of these depositories to deposit his funds instead of a savings bank under the state laws or a national bank that pays interest on deposits.

Mr. CARTER. The Senator correctly interprets the purpose of the bill. It is not in contemplation that the postal savings bank system here proposed will enter into competition with established banking institutions of any kind. I think a fair consideration of the measure in connection with the experience of those countries in which like provisions have obtained will show that, far from injuring or interfering with established banking institutions, the postal savings system will be in aid of the financial operations of the country generally, in that money in hiding constantly—money that seeks a hiding place in the presence of financial disturbance—will be collected together in the postal savings depositories, because of widespread opportunity and unquestionable safety.

The rate of interest allowed is but 2 per cent per annum, whereas throughout all the States, on the average, the savings banks pay over three and a half per cent per annum, and in certain sections of the country the rate of interest paid by banks will be found much in excess of the interest I have stated as the average paid by the savings banks. The result, I think, will be that the individual who collects small sums from time to time in the post-office will, for the purpose of getting a greater interest, when a considerable sum shall have been amassed, deposit in the savings bank, or in the regular commercial bank, or the trust company, or in some institution willing to pay a higher rate of interest. That has been the experience throughout the United Kingdom in all the years this system has been in operation since 1861.

I think we may dwell with considerable profit upon the banking achievements of Great Britain since 1861. Never in the history of that great Kingdom has the banking system been greater or the banking activity more widespread or effective than since the establishment of the postal savings bank system. The deposits in the savings banks conducted outside of the postal system in the commercial institutions have steadily increased in volume side by side with the increase in the postal savings deposits.

I would that persons interested in banking throughout the United States could inform themselves of the history of postal savings banks and of the provisions of this bill before they do what many unfortunately do, condemn the system as unworkable in this country. Such an investigation would disclose the fact that the postal savings system was established in England in 1861, after fifty years of the most stubbornly contested fight ever precipitated by any measure presented for the consideration of the British Parliament. In that year, under the leadership of a statesman whose fame is secure, Mr. Gladstone, the system was established, and it was the pioneer system of the world.

The lead of England has since been followed by every country in the world, the United States and Germany alone excepted, which claims to be a first-class power. Nay, beyond that, Mr. President, all the smaller states of Europe, Spain alone excepted, have the postal savings system, and in no instance has a backward step been taken in this line of legislation. The system has developed thrift amongst the people, a disposition to save the pennies and to keep them actively at work. It was this system which led to the development of such splendid financial strength in France. It is this system which to-day furnishes the ballast for the great Empire of Japan in her financial operations, the pennies of the people placed at the service of commerce and trade, while at the same time serving a useful purpose and developing better citizenship because of the developed thrift. No man can fail to be a better citizen of this Republic who has a small stake in the postal savings banks of the country. No man will shoulder a gun and fire at the flag that waves over the post-office where his savings are husbanded.

There is behind this bill, Mr. President, a purpose better, I think, than the contemplation of profit, because it behooves those in charge of the government of this great country, extending over such a broad territorial area, to so legislate as to interest the people in the Government of the United States, to have the people realize that in truth and in fact it is a Government for the people; and I am amazed that we find in this country men—money changers—putting their profit-yielding possibilities up against the creation of better citizenship, more profound interest to the average man in the operations of his Government.

But I did not contemplate when I arose proceeding at length with an address this morning. I was led away by the question of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], which was a very proper question, and I am glad to have been permitted to respond to it.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to know a little more about the amendment which he has introduced. I objected in some remarks I made the other day to an amendment which the Senator offered on account of the possibility of depriving the depositors of their interest for over eleven months, and the Senator finally admitted that that would be the case. In those remarks it developed, however, that it was the opinion of the Postmaster-General that that sort of an amendment should be made. Do I understand the Senator, then, in introducing this amendment, in leaving this to the Postmaster-General, to tie this up with his opinion, and still have the interest calculated the same way as in the amendment which the Senator offered the other day?

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CARTER. I shall be glad to do so as soon as I have answered the question of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT].

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator kindly yield to me a moment before he answers?

Mr. CARTER. I have no objection, if the Senator from Nebraska has not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana yields to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] and to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] that I hope they can see their way clear to let us now proceed with the omnibus claims bill. I submit that while, of course, they have a perfect right and are within their parliamentary right and privilege to discuss here all the afternoon the unfinished business, the Senate has devoted a good deal of time to the unfinished business so far, and I submit that we all know that there is no probability of the Senate reaching a vote on that measure at the present session.

Mr. CARTER. I do not know that.

Mr. FULTON. We ought to be allowed to proceed with those matters on which we can get a vote.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULTON. I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. If there are any other Senators who entertain the views expressed by the Senator from Oregon, that the bill relating to the postal savings banks is not to reach a vote at this session, I trust the Senator from Montana will push his bill in time and out of time. It is a measure in the interest of the people. The Republican party by its national platform is committed to it; the President of the United States has recommended it, and the President-elect is in favor of it. If there is any measure which should receive favorable consideration at the hands of the Senate at this session, it is the bill now under consideration, in charge of the Senator from Montana.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CARTER. I think I will yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. FULTON. I do not wish to presume to occupy the position of intending to assume to know more about the probable vote on the bill, which is the unfinished business, than any other Senator, but I beg leave very calmly to express the prediction that the Senator's bill is not going to reach a vote at the present session of Congress.

Mr. CARTER. Of course the Senator from Oregon will aid us to the extent of his ability in securing a vote.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly, sir. I have said that I would vote for the measure, and should be glad to vote for it, but I also beg the Senator from Montana to aid me to the extent of his ability in getting a vote on the omnibus claims bill, in which the Senate is interested, and which has been pending here now for two sessions. We can very quickly get it out of the way. I say, in all good faith, to the Senator that I do not think the time ought to be taken up now in the discussion of the unfinished business when we have started in with the consideration of the claims bill. I trust the Senator from Montana will not be offended by what I say, but the situation appears to me to be as I have stated it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I realize the very earnest desire of the Senator from Oregon to make progress. I took occasion to state, when the unfinished business was placed before the Senate, that my present desire was to have the committee amendments disposed of, so that Senators might view the bill pending as the unfinished business, in its finished state so far as the committee are concerned, prepared for amendments to be offered by Senators generally.

The amendment under consideration is very brief and in the nature of a compromise of the conflicting views of Senators as previously expressed.

In reply to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] I will say that it is not contemplated that the Postmaster-General, in the exercise of his discretion under the amendment I have offered, will accept the half-yearly basis of computation of interest; but, as previously explained, if he can, without overburdening the administration with clerical details, compute the interest upon the basis of the monthly balance, that will be done; if upon the basis of a quarterly balance only, then that will be resorted to; and at last, if it is found to be quite impracticable to do otherwise, the half-yearly basis will be accepted. I think I can give the Senator ample assurance upon this point. The inability of the Senate to fully determine the extent to which the work or the details of the work would overburden administration seems to render this solution very wise, in that it lodges a certain degree of discretion with the officer or department to be charged with the execution of the law.

Now, Mr. President, one word with reference to the observations of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON]. This postal savings bill has been pending as the unfinished business for some time. Numerous Senators have expressed a desire to be heard upon the merits of the bill, both for and against it. Occasion has not arisen when Senators prepared to speak could speak, and, in consequence, the bill has been postponed from day to day, or temporarily laid aside. There are three or four Senators desirous of addressing the Senate somewhat at length upon the subject presented by the bill; and I now take occasion, in the light of the observation of the Senator from Oregon, to ask those Senators who have amendments to press to be prepared to press them for consideration, and as to those Senators who desire to address themselves to the bill at length, I indulge the hope that they will be at an early day prepared to take up the subject.

I shall not now, but will at a date not far distant, ask the Senate to fix a day for a vote on this bill and all pending amendments, and I trust that no objection will be interposed after the long time allowed for consideration, amendment, and debate. For the present, Mr. President, I will ask that question be put upon the amendment just offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOPKINS in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. HEYBURN. The amendment just offered has not been printed, as I understand. There is but one copy available. It contains some provisions that seem to me very important for consideration, and I should like an opportunity of investigating the amendment a little further before voting upon it.

Mr. CARTER. Then I ask that the amendment be printed. If no Senator desires to speak upon the bill or to press any further amendment at this time, I will ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. FULTON. I ask that the omnibus claims bill may be now laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from Oregon, which was made the special order for to-day.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the "Bowman" and "Tucker" acts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the bill was heretofore under consideration, its reading was not completed. The reading will be resumed.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 40, line 15.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the nature of some of these claims; and in making this statement I would not for the world reflect upon the committee or upon any Member of the Senate. I realize that Senators representing States where these claims arise must have great difficulty in considering them sufficiently to present them to the Senate, and I realize how difficult it must be to obtain any evidence as to the validity or character of such claims.

I have before me a statement as to these claims. For instance, here is a claim for 4,015 bushels of corn at 75 cents a bushel, which was taken forty-two years ago, and where there can be no testimony of any kind as to the number of bushels that were taken and their value at that time. Another claim is for 40 hogs at 8 cents a pound; another for 13,800 rails at $3 a cord, amounting to $414, constituting a rail fence in some States. I am unable to ascertain from this statement in what State this claim for rails is made.

Mr. FULTON. In Arkansas.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Rails are very high down there.

Mr. ALDRICH. Another claim is for one good farm wagon, $60, another for one set of blacksmith's tools, $40. Here is another for "two large navy revolvers furnished at said time and place, the just value of same being $150."

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Where was that?

Mr. ALDRICH. That claim is from Nevada. They do not use such large ones as that in Arkansas, I take it. [Laughter.]

Another claim is for powder and shot for said revolvers, $100.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Rhode Island by what organization or officer those articles were taken. Were they taken by the army?

Mr. ALDRICH. That claim arose in some Indian war, I think.

Mr. BACON. It is not claimed that they were used for the benefit of the Government, then?

Mr. ALDRICH. Here is the case of a claim for "a growing crop, 1,000 bushels, at 40 cents" a bushel. I should like to know by what process any evidence could be secured as to the quantity or value of a growing crop forty-two years ago where, from the very nature of things, the claimant furnishes the only statement or only evidence that can possibly be secured as to the validity of the claim.

I think we ought to devise, or try to devise, some method by which this form of claims should be barred from further consideration at some time in the future.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me a moment?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, we are constantly hearing remarks like those which my friend, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], has just made, that we are making these appropriations here and doing it without sufficient evidence as to the validity of the claims. It is said that there are no witnesses to be produced by the Government, and that generally witnesses for the claimant give hearsay evidence. That is a reflection upon the Court of Claims implying that they would adjudicate and find facts and certify them to the Senate without proof having been made.

The Senator who now occupies the chair [Mr. HOPKINS] at the last session said that there were no survivors to prove the facts. There are some Senators in this Chamber who fought in the war between the States. We survived, and we survived when we had the least opportunity of surviving of any people in the United States.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator, in making reference to my objection to some of these claims at the last session, will remember that I predicated my objection upon the ground that the Southern Claims Commission was organized by Congress some years after the close of the civil war, when these facts were all fresh in the minds of the people, and that that commission went into the Southern States and took testimony upon all of these matters. The point I made was that this bill contained claims that were rejected by that commission.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Contained claims that were rejected?

Mr. HOPKINS. Contained claims that were rejected by the commission that was organized and authorized by Congress forty years ago.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. HOPKINS. Not at all.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I do not think there is a single claim in this bill that has come to my notice that has ever been reported upon by the Southern Claims Commission.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think the chairman in charge of the bill will recognize the fact that I called his attention not only to one, but to a number of such claims.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It must be a comparatively small number.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. There are claims here that were rejected by the commission, but they were rejected because the commission had not jurisdiction to hear them.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. Especially church claims.

Mr. FULTON. For instance, church claims, all claims on account of the use and occupation of real estate, and matters of that kind. The commission held that it was without jurisdiction to adjudicate such cases; that it was limited to claims for stores and supplies.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I have not my data before me now, as I had them then, but my remembrance is clear that some of these claims were rejected because the claimants failed to produce evidence showing that they were loyal or that, under the law as it existed at that time, they had meritorious claims. A number of those claims were rejected because the parties making the claims were disloyal to the Government.

Mr. FULTON. I do not recall such a claim as that, although it is possible, of course.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I object to this bill being spoken of as a "southern claims bill." The fact is that this bill carries an appropriation of $2,299,000, of which, under the Bowman and Tucker acts, there is of the total amount $346,000 only for claimants residing in the Southern States.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. JOHNSTON. Certainly, sir.

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator is mistaken in regard to the amount.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator is correct; I see now that I was mistaken.

Mr. FULTON. Under the Tucker and Bowman acts the amount of the claims is $985,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes; I have now my memorandum here to show the amounts.

Mr. FULTON. Right in that connection I should say that under the agreement which we have, which will restore all of the claims that were stricken from the House bill and all that were omitted from the first report to the Senate, will aggregate $125,000 additional; so that there is something over a million dollars of the claims reported by the Court of Claims.

Mr. JOHNSTON. As the bill is reported there are $985,900——

Mr. FULTON. But it is fair that I should say in that connection that not all of these by any means are Southern claims.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I am going to advert to that. Out of that $985,900 there are only $639,000 for claims of citizens of Southern States. In this bill there are appropriations for claims from Massachusetts, where so many sanguinary battles were fought during the war, amounting to $391,500.

Mr. WARREN. Those are French spoliation claims.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir; I am speaking of it because when the charge is made that this bill is for the payment of southern claims, I want to show the Senate that to all the States of the South the appropriation is practically $639,000, and to States other than the Southern States the rest of the amount will be appropriated. I do not want the South to be charged here as standing and grabbing for things which they are not entitled to, while under the hue and cry of "Southern claims" we find Congress appropriating to the citizens of other sections of the country nearly four times as much as to citizens of the South.

So far as the rightfulness of these claims is concerned, I want to say that, so far as I know, not one claim has been put on this bill that has not been adjudicated and found by the Court of Claims to be fair and just. A great many have been rejected because the claimant was disloyal or the evidence was not sufficient or the claimant was guilty of laches or for some other cause.

The chairman of the committee, I thought, and still think, has been very strict in putting these claims in the bill. The fact is I have felt his opposition pretty keenly. There are, in my opinion, a great many just claims that ought to have been in the bill that are not there. But the main purpose of my rising was to inform the Senate that, instead of this being a bill to provide payment for claims arising in the South, instead of its being a bill whose benefits went to the people of the South, as a matter of fact, out of the $2,299,000 it carries, but $700,000, in round numbers, go to people in the Southern States.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not wish to consume time by extending the discussion. I will only say, in answer to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that, while much of his criticism is, in my judgment, just, yet there is this consideration: These matters are sent to the Court of Claims. Whatever the evidence may be, the Court of Claims make findings. The findings are sent back to Congress. Under those circumstances Congress can not well afford to refuse to pay. The only remedy that I can see——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

Mr. FULTON. Just a second.

The only remedy I can see is the one I have suggested, that we repeal section 14 of the Tucker Act, and also the section in the Bowman Act which provides for sending what are known as "war claims" to the court, because when these claims are sent to the court and they are decided in favor of the claimant, even though the testimony may have been very light on one side and none on the other, they come back here. The claimants think they are entitled to be paid under the findings. They have gone to great expense in presenting their cases before the Court of Claims, and Senators representing the States in which the claimants live can not avoid pressing them. They can not do it, and it is unjust to expect that they should. If we continue the policy of sending such claims to the Court of Claims we must continue the policy of paying them when they come back certified to us.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. Are there any claims now in this bill that have not been adjudicated by the Court of Claims?

Mr. FULTON. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. What proportion of them?

Mr. FULTON. I will tell the Senator in a second.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have looked in the report, and have been unable to find it.

Mr. FULTON. The cases that have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims aggregate $985,747. To that is to be added, say, in round numbers, $125,000, under an agreement which we have, so far as the committee is concerned, to restore certain claims that were struck out.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, Mr. President, I should like to ask, in addition to that, the amount of claims that have been included in this bill?

Mr. FULTON. The amount, I will say to the Senator, is approximately two and a half million dollars—a little less than two and a half million dollars.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then, Mr. President, as I understand, about a million dollars of the claims provided to be paid in this bill have been passed upon by the Court of Claims and about $2,000,000 additional have not been before the Court of Claims, but stand here upon the report of our committee. Is that a fact?

Mr. FULTON. Perhaps I should correct my previous statement. I had not in mind what are known as the "French spoliation claims," because they are classified differently; but all the French spoliation claims, aggregating in this bill $714,631, were passed upon by the Court of Claims—that is, they rendered what we call "court findings." They were not carried into a decree; neither have any of these adjudications been carried into a formal decree. They are merely findings.

Mr. HEYBURN. Has the Court of Claims rejected any portion of the claims covered by this bill?

Mr. FULTON. Oh, no.

Mr. HEYBURN. None?

Mr. FULTON. No; and I will say to the Senator that we have most rigidly examined these claims, and we have rejected, I am very sure, thousands of dollars of claims that, under the policy of the committee heretofore, would have been reported favorably.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I understand that, including the French spoliation claims, with those that have been passed upon and approved by the Court of Claims, there still are claims involving a million dollars, or something over a million dollars, allowed by this bill that have not been passed upon by the Court of Claims at all?

Mr. FULTON. Well, practically that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will look at the report from the Committee on Claims, page 2, he will find that all of the claims in this bill have been passed upon by the Court of Claims, with the exception of $533,453.82. Those are claims which have either passed the House or the Senate—that is, the $533,453.82 are claims that have either passed the House or the Senate. But all the other claims in the bill have been passed upon by the Court of Claims.

Mr. HEYBURN. I had observed that statement at the bottom of page 2, and it was that statement which prompted the inquiry I submitted. The impression I gathered from reading that statement was that there was something over half a million dollars in claims which have not been passed upon by the Court of Claims or considered by it at all——

Mr. SMOOT. That is true.

Mr. HEYBURN. But stand here simply upon the consideration of either one or the other House of Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. But there is no claim in that amount which has not passed one or the other of the Houses.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to inquire further, Why have these claims not been submitted to the ordeal of the Court of Claims?

Mr. FULTON. I will state to the Senator that very many of these claims that are not listed here as Court of Claims findings are claims which have been certified by departments, and in the form of bills have passed one House or the other.

Now, as stated by the Senator from Utah, every one of this half million and over of claims has, in the form of a bill, passed one House of Congress or the other; and many of them—I think it is safe to state that the great majority—stand on recommendations of some one department of the Government or the other.

Mr. HEYBURN. Are we to understand that we are to take the findings of an executive officer of the Government as a basis for our action, when we have already provided a court having judicial functions to determine such claims?

Mr. FULTON. I have not said so. I have simply said that in addition to the recommendation and approval of the department in most of these we have the indorsement of one House or the other, which makes it in order upon any appropriation bill. There are a great many matters that do not properly go to the Court of Claims, and few of these matters that are in this bill as Court of Claims findings could go there except through a resolution of Congress.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would ask the Senator further—I have not had time to examine the report in full—whether there is any classification of these cases that would enable us to know the age of the claims?

Mr. FULTON. The Senator can find an explanation of every item in the bill——

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; by reading it.

Mr. FULTON. In the report which accompanies the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. But are they anywhere classified, so that we can readily determine how old these claims are?

Mr. FULTON. They are all old enough.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask the Senator for a general statement, if he does not object to giving it, as to how old the youngest claim is?

Mr. FULTON. Did the Senator ever know a matter to come before Congress and get through within a year or two?

Mr. HEYBURN. I have known many cases that did not get through in a year or two.

Mr. FULTON. They have all been pending for many years. I do not suppose any of them are infants in any sense of the word.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I may have the indulgence of the Senator entitled to the floor, I only desire to suggest at this time that it is rather a difficult subject to deal with, in view of the fact that the report—I am not intending to criticise the committee, because it doubtless exercised good judgment in the matter—does not classify these claims, so that we may readily determine what claims belong to one class or another; that is to say, what claims come before the committee and ultimately before the Congress upon the recommendation of a bureau.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is mistaken. In the bill these claims are classified. In the first place, you will find that only what are known as "Court of Claims findings" appear in one part of the bill, and they are grouped under the States in which they arose. Then there is a class of claims known as the "difference between sea and shore pay in the navy;" Court of Claims findings, it is true, but they are classified. Each class is assembled under one heading. Then there are the French spoliation claims, all by themselves, assembled under one head. And then the Senator will also find that in the order in which the claims appear in the bill they are explained in the report, or else a copy of the judgment of the court follows in the report. So the Senator can have no difficulty in finding a full explanation in the report of every item in the bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. Am I to understand, or is the Senate to understand, that every item in this bill was sent to the committee in the nature of a bill passed by the Senate?

Mr. FULTON. No.

Mr. HEYBURN. Or did the committee take up original claims?

Mr. FULTON. Those matters that rest on a Court of Claims finding, as I call it, are certified from the Court of Claims to the Senate——

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. FULTON. And referred by the Senate to the committee. Those are acted on without any further proceedings on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask how the committee gained notice of the class of claims other than those reported by the Court of Claims?

Mr. FULTON. They are matters that have been introduced in the Senate and referred to the committee.

Mr. HEYBURN. Without action by the Senate other than the reference?

Mr. FULTON. Oh, yes; and then reported; introduced in the shape of a bill, and the bill reported favorably by the committee and passed by the Senate, and as being a claim, the Senator having charge of it having requested that it be placed in this measure.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then there are no items in this bill which have not been passed upon by the Senate?

Mr. FULTON. There is no item in this bill which has not been passed upon by the Senate or the court.

Mr. WARREN and Mr. SMOOT. Or the House.

Mr. FULTON. I should say, by one branch of Congress or the Court of Claims.

Mr. HEYBURN. When?

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FULTON. I will, if the Senator from Idaho is through.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will wait.

Mr. SCOTT. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if there are not a great many claims reported favorably from the Court of Claims which the committee did not include in this bill?

Mr. FULTON. I think more than a thousand, likely.

Mr. SCOTT. That is my understanding; a good many.

Mr. FULTON. I explained when this bill was first up, at the last session, that the committee adopted certain rules; and, as the Senator from Alabama has said, great complaint has been made about the strictness of the rules adopted by the committee. We have required that it appear by the court findings that the parties were loyal, that the property was taken for the use of the army, that there has not been negligence or inexcusable negligence, at least, in presenting it; and where property has been destroyed by the army, but has not been used by it, we have refused to pay. It has been a source of great complaint that where they would tear down a church edifice, for instance, we have declined to include the claim for the value of the church and have simply allowed for the actual value of the lumber as old lumber, not as valued in the edifice, and that has been the cause of a good deal of adverse citicism. But that is the rule we have adopted and adhered to. There are, however, a few claims of that kind which we have allowed, because, through an oversight, they crept into the first report to the Senate, and Senators advised their constituents that those claims had been allowed and were included in the bill. I discovered they were in there, had a rereference of the bill, and eliminated them; but it was such a source of embarrassment that we finally agreed to permit them to be restored.

Mr. SCOTT. I want to ask the Senator a question. As I understand the ruling of the committee, for instance, a joint stock company was required to prove that it was loyal?

Mr. FULTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SCOTT. How would that be possible, I ask the Senator? In my State of course there were a great many churches and schools and other property destroyed during the war. I have in mind one case which is not included in this bill. Of course if the Senator is not going to allow any amendments to the bill, I shall not press the amendment I have in mind, but it looks to me to be very unjust to rule it out. That was the case of a school.

Mr. FULTON. The question of loyalty is not presented so far as schools and churches are concerned. The court always finds that they were loyal.

Mr. SCOTT. The school I refer to was at Harpers Ferry. It was taken, and after the Government took charge it sold the brick and material, etc., but I have been unable to get it in the Senator's bill.

Mr. FULTON. I do not recall the particular case to which the Senator refers.

Mr. SCOTT. If there are any amendments to go in at all, I should like certainly to have that case included, because it looks to me like a very just claim.

Mr. FULTON. I suppose there is not a Senator representing one of the States where the army was during the civil war that has not some fault to find of the same character as that presented by the Senator from West Virginia. Now, then, I ask the Secretary——

Mr. RAYNER. I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. RAYNER. I want to ask a question which may dispose of many of these amendments, or at least show the disposition of the committee. Has the committee come to any conclusion with reference to claims coming in since the report of this bill? The bill was reported March 6, 1908. Claims have come in since. Has the committee come to any conclusion as to whether it will allow those cases?

Mr. FULTON. Yes. I think, so far as the members of the committee are concerned, they are opposed to any additional amendments. They will have to be included in another bill. Of course there may be some matters on which the Senate has actually acted and passed to the inclusion of which we would not have any right to object.

Mr. President, I want to inquire whether or not at the last session, when this bill was first under consideration, an amendment was offered under the State of Alabama. That would be on page 38. There should have been inserted four additional items, but I think they were not inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No such items were inserted in the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, after line 16, it is proposed to insert:

To the Bolivar Lodge, No. 127, Free, Ancient, and Accepted Masons, of Stevenson, Ala., $1,150.

To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Bellefonte, Ala., $380.

To the trustees of the Missionary Baptist Church, of Waterloo, Ala., $615.

To the trustees of the Presbyterian Church of Decatur, Ala., $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if the cases with respect to which he has just offered an amendment were in the bill as it came from the House. It is proposed now to restore to the bill, as I understand, all claims that were in the bill when it came to the Senate from the House.

Mr. FULTON. All items that were in the bill as it came from the House and excluded in the first report, and also all items that were added or proposed by the first report of the Senate committee and omitted in the last report?

Mr. FRAZIER. I was just going to ask that question.

Mr. FULTON. I think that includes them all.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like the Senator to give me some information. On page 73 of the bill there are two claims labeled "Nebraska." I have been trying to find some trace of them in the report. Can the Senator give me any information with relation to them?

Mr. FULTON. The Senator will see that those are items which were inserted by the House. He will find it in the House report. The Senator should send and get a copy of the House report on the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. I have here a report to accompany House bill 15372.

Mr. FULTON. That explains only the items the Senate committee reported.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask the Senator another question before he sits down.

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. In this report I find one claim under the title "Nebraska." I have been looking through it. I find that is a claim in a case where Congress has already acted with respect to a general class of cases. On page 455 of this report——

Mr. FULTON. I wish the Senator would pardon me. I hope the Senator will allow us to proceed in an orderly way and take up each State in the order in which it appears in the bill and dispose of the items. Then when we reach Nebraska we will take up Nebraska claims.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that I am not objecting to the bill; but I want to get general information, to see upon what theory it is founded. There may be other such claims from other States; and if there are, it seems to me there are objections to them. Here is the claim. I do not know anything about it. I never heard of it before. It is labeled "Nebraska." It may be a proper claim. But Congress has legislated heretofore as to how claims exactly like this should be disposed of. Yet under this legislation we are to undo what Congress by direct action has done in the past.

Mr. FULTON. I think the Senator is mistaken in saying that Congress has legislated against the payment of these claims. These claims depended upon a construction of the statute, and the department held against them, and the matter went to the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court held that the contention of the claimants was correct, but in the meantime the claims of a great many people had become barred by statute. They could not proceed, and we referred them all to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BURKETT. Let me call the attention of the Senator to a few lines from the law to which I refer:

The claim was previously presented to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department for settlement, and was allowed by such accounting officers under the decision of this court and of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Strong v. The United States (125 U. S., 656), the sum thus allowed being $259.66. This action was reported to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury in House Executive Document No. 199, Fifty-second Congress, first session. In appropriating for such allowance (and others of like character) Congress provided—that no part of any of these claims should be paid which accrued more than six years prior to the date of filing the petition in the Court of Claims upon which the judgment was rendered, which being affirmed by the Supreme Court has been adopted by the accounting officers as the basis of allowance of such claims.

Thereafter, pursuant to said proviso, the accounting officers readjusted said claim for such difference of pay as the same had been settled under the same decision in United States v. Strong, and refused to allow that portion which accrued more than six years prior to July 17, 1886, the date on which the petition in the said case of Strong v. The United States was filed in the Court of Claims. Upon such readjustment there was found to be due and then paid to claimant's decedent out of said appropriation the sum of nothing, being the amount which accrued subsequent to July 16, 1880, and to which said proviso did not relate.

If you appropriate for this claim, it seems to me you are legislating now absolutely in contravention of the legislation already had of a general character in which this claim is included.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is reading from the statement of the case. The findings of fact by the court are—

Claimant is a citizen of the United States and his decedent was an officer in the navy thereof, and a resident of the State of Nebraska, and is the identical person whose claim, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in United States v. Strong (125 U. S., 656), was adjusted by the accounting officers, reported to Congress, and appropriated for, as alleged in the petition.

The amount found due claimant under said decision was $259.66; the amount paid claimant's decedent was nothing; the amount suspended under the proviso to the act of Congress approved July 28, 1892, and which still remains unpaid, is $259.66.

That is the balance which has not been paid.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. As I understand, the bill is now being read for committee amendments. When we finish the reading of the bill for committee amendments, I desire to know if other amendments will be allowed. Is that the understanding—that amendments will be allowed to be presented by Senators on the floor?

Mr. FULTON. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. McCREARY. I say the bill is now being read for committee amendments, and I desire to know if an opportunity will be allowed, after we finish reading the bill, for other amendments to be offered?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. McCREARY. Now, one other question. This bill was reported in March last. Since that time the Court of Claims has made favorable findings on other claims. Will it be in order as we read this bill to offer amendments covering the findings of the Court of Claims since March last?

Mr. FULTON. I suppose it would be in order to offer any amendment a Senator chose—to include in the bill items found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. McCREARY. Since the bill was reported?

Mr. FULTON. Whether that would be in order or not, it is not for me to say, of course; but I, as chairman of the committee, shall object to any such items being inserted in the bill. I think they should go over to another bill. They can not be investigated as they should be investigated here, and I think they should be remitted to another bill.

Mr. McCREARY. The point, then, made by the chairman is that if a claim has been decided and there has been a favorable finding by the Court of Claims, the committee should have an opportunity to look at it before it is offered on the floor.

Mr. FULTON. Yes, sir; I think so.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I rise to say a few words more in the nature of a statement of a matter of personal privilege.

In the discussion thus far it has been stated that this bill represents the views of the full committee. I want to say that it does not represent my views. I am a member of that committee. I did not agree to it. This so-called "arrangement" does not meet my views. I find that all the claims from Arkansas were placed in the hands of my colleague before I became a member of this body. He has agreed to this arrangement because he thinks it best. But I want to say here now that I think the terms of this bill are very unjust and that many just claims are left out by this so-called "arrangement," especially the claim referred to by my colleague of the church house at Clarksville. That is a claim where a little church was used by the federal troops for a commissary store. When it was discovered that the Confederates were coming, they destroyed the church. That little church organization put in a claim under the authorization of the act of Congress. It was sent to the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims found in favor of the church, and this committee of which I am a member arbitrarily cut down the claim from $4,400 to $400. I think that is not fair; I think it is not just; and I will never agree to it.

Mr. President, I heard with some surprise the statement of the chairman of the committee, as well as that of the Senator from Rhode Island, that in the determination of these claims the Government has no show. I am surprised at that statement. Who organized this court? Did not you gentlemen of the majority organize the court? Is it not your court? Who appoints the judges to that court? Who sends out the commission to take the testimony? A poor claimant in a country district puts in a claim. You have the court which sends out a commission; the whole machinery of the court is in your hands; and yet you tell me now at this late day that the Government, in the determination of this matter, has no show.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator mean to say that the party which has been in the majority of late is in control of the courts ipso facto?

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir; but it is your court. It is a federal court. You send out a commission to take the testimony.

Mr. FULTON. Does the Senator wish it understood that Arkansas is not within the Federal Government?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir, we are; and we are presenting what we conceive to be just claims. The claim to which I have referred has been found just by a court organized by the Federal Government, upon the testimony taken by the Federal Government, and this committee arbitrarily cuts it down. I am here to enter my solemn protest against it and to let this body know that I do not agree with that arrangement.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator is a part of the Federal Government.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, sir; and I am going to stay that way, too.

Mr. FULTON. Then he is partly responsible.

Of course the criticism offered by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas is one the committee has heard continually, and it is based on the rule which I sought to explain a few minutes ago, that we declined to allow for property which was destroyed by the army, even though it was in the form of churches, and in this instance we rejected the claim. I admit it is a claim which appeals to one pretty strongly. Still that is the rule we adopted, and we have adhered to it. I should say, and I intended to say further, in answer to the Senator from Nebraska, as to these claims involving a question of the difference between sea and shore pay, that there have been a great many appeals to Congress to pay them because there was only a question of the lapse of time. The Supreme Court had held that they were just under the statute. They were referred by the Senate in a body, not individually, not separately, to the Court of Claims, with the intention, of course, of paying what the Court of Claims found actually due. There is no more meritorious claim or item in this bill than those items.

Now, I ask that we may proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. Before the Senator sits down, I should like to ask him a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

Mr. BURKETT. I am not criticising the justness of this claim. I am only stating that it has been barred by specific statute.

Mr. FULTON. Only to this extent: After the decision of the Supreme Court construing the law, Congress provided for the auditing of these claims, but put a limitation on the length of time that the auditor could go back, and prohibited any that had not been presented within six years. That manifestly was unjust. So, finally, the Senate referred them all to the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, in what I say I do not wish to be understood as criticising the chairman of the committee or the committee itself on any of these claims. I rise now only to fortify the statement I made in answer to the Senator from Alabama a few minutes ago.

On page 36 of the bill I find the case of William T. Hamner, of Tuscaloosa County, Ala., and an allowance of $805. That is an Alabama claim. I find by an investigation of the report made by the Southern Claims Commission that that claim was considered by that commission; that all the testimony which could be presented, both by the claimant and by the Government, was considered, and that the commission rejected the claim.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator state again what the item is? I was interrupted just at the moment.

Mr. HOPKINS. The bill does not show what the items were, but the report of the Southern Claims Commission shows that it was for a yoke of oxen, 2 horses, 2 mules——

Mr. FULTON. What is the name of the claimant?

Mr. HOPKINS. The claimant is William T. Hamner, and the item is on page 36 of the bill.

Mr. FULTON. I will get the report and see what it is.

Mr. HOPKINS. What I desire to call to the attention of the chairman is, I find in examining the report of the Southern Claims Commission that that claim was rejected, and they rejected it, among other reasons, for the following:

> The claimant has taken the benefit of the bankrupt law since this claim against the Government accrued, and thereby divested himself of all right to prosecute the same. It is therefore rejected.

If that finding of fact is correct as made by the Southern Claims Commission, then this claimant has no more right to the property then inventoried than any gentleman in Iowa or in any other State of the Union.

The fact that the Court of Claims may have allowed the claim can not do away with the fact that it was rejected by the Southern Claims Commission. It brings up the point made by the Senator from Rhode Island, that in the multiplicity of cases which are presented, the volume of business that is done by the court, and the length of time which has elapsed since these claims accrued the Government is not in a position to make the proper defense.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I will remind the Senator of the fact that even his statement does not show that this claim was rejected on its merits. It was rejected because the party had gone into bankruptcy and because, I assume, his estate under those circumstances was not entitled to it, but that it should go to the register in bankruptcy instead of to him.

Mr. HOPKINS. The point I am making——

Mr. FULTON. I was going to suggest that the merits of the claim were not passed on, and it may be that the property was turned over to him by the court in bankruptcy subsequently. I do not think the Senator can assume that the Court of Claims found in his favor without anything to base the finding on. The fact that he had gone into bankruptcy undoubtedly appeared to the court and that he was entitled to the claim. It was not a legal claim in any sense. It was not such a claim as under an action in bankruptcy would be turned over to a creditor.

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to state to the Senator that by virtue of going through bankruptcy he divested himself of all title to it. He had no standing either in a court of common law or in equity.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator has in mind the property to which he would have an absolute title. To this he had no title; it is a mere gratuity.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not agree with the Senator from Oregon upon that proposition. The Southern Claims Commission was organized for the purpose of finding what property had been taken from persons who were entitled to the property and who had either a legal or an equitable title to it. The claim that this party had the property is admitted on the record, but it is shown here that the commission found that the title had been divested and it had passed to other parties; and he had no more right to bring a suit for the articles mentioned in the inventory than any person living in Canada.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] wishes to ask a question, and I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. FLINT. The question I was going to ask the Senator from Oregon was pretty fully brought out by the statement made by the Senator from Illinois. The Southern Claims Commission having made a finding that this man was not entitled to recovery for the reason that he had gone through bankruptcy, and the matter having been referred to the Court of Claims, does it not illustrate just what was brought out by the Senator from Rhode Island, that the facts are not brought out in the Court of Claims so that the Government is able to present a defense to the various actions after forty-two years? The Southern Claims Commission having actually found that the man had gone through bankruptcy and was not entitled to a judgment against the United States, some forty years afterwards the matter is submitted to the Court of Claims, and this very evidence probably was withheld from the court, and the court makes a finding showing that this man is entitled to it when, as a matter of fact, he is not.

Mr. FULTON. I do not think the inference of the Senator from California itself is a correct one. In the first place, I am not here to defend the policy of sending these matters to the Court of Claims. I have already expressed my views on that subject many times. But I am here to say that as long as we send the claims to the Court of Claims and the Court of Claims finds in favor of the claimants, we are in honor bound to pay them. That is the only thing that it is necessary to discuss here.

As to this particular item, it is a House item to start with, one inserted in the bill by the House, but the mere fact that the commission found that the party had gone into bankruptcy and therefore could not prosecute the claim at that time does not argue that he may not have been discharged from bankruptcy and restored to his right to prosecute the claim.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, Mr. President——

Mr. FULTON. And the presumption is——

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FULTON. In just a second. The presumption is in favor of the finding of the court being correct and based on that proposition. I will hear the Senator now.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the Senator from Oregon claim that if a man is discharged in bankruptcy he can still hold title to property that has been transferred in the bankruptcy proceeding?

Mr. FULTON. No; but this property was not transferred. It could not be transferred. How can you transfer a claim that a party has no title to? It is a mere gratuity. It is not a legal right that he can enforce. He is permitted to present his claim, and the Government considers it, if it sees fit, and if it makes him a payment it is a gratuity. After a party is discharged from bankruptcy it oftentimes follows that certain property is turned over to him; his debts have been paid and he has property left, Nobody will question that, I assume.

Mr. President, if we may proceed, I should like to consider one item at a time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire just a moment. I was not in the Senate Chamber when page 36 was passed, but I desire to call the attention of Senators to the following claim:

To J. P. McClendon, administrator de bonis non of Meredith King, deceased, late of Jackson County, $700.

That is one of the claims that was considered by the Southern Claims Commission. I find in looking at the report of that commission that the claim was made in 1877–78; that they rejected the claim, and among the reasons they have given are the following:

The claimant is the widow and administratrix of Meredith King—

Now, that widow is dead and an administrator de bonis non has been appointed in her place—

The claimant is the widow and administratrix of Meredith King, who died in 1864. They were residents of Jackson County, Ala. The claim has been investigated by an agent. The property was taken during the lifetime of Mr. King, and he was not, as appears from our agent's report, an adherent of the Union cause. He was a Breckinridge Democrat and an original secessionist, pronounced the conscript law "a glorious law," and was in full sympathy with the Confederate cause. Mrs. King agreed with him in sentiment. The claim is disallowed.

That was in 1878, and it was at a time when, if the facts presented there were not correct, it was within the power of Mr. King and Mrs. King to have corrected them in the proper forum. As was stated by the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], forty-two or forty-three years have passed, and we find this claim now embodied in the bill that is considered here. As has been well said by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], if we do not call a halt upon claims of this character, we might as well turn the Treasury over to claimants of that kind without any limit whatever.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, before the Arkansas items are passed I desire to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that he has failed to suggest a committee amendment in favor of Sarah Winter, $1,380.

Mr. FULTON. I have it. I was occupied just at the moment when we reached that point. I now offer the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, after line 16, insert:

To Sarah Winter, of Ouachita County, Ark., $1,380.

Mr. KEAN. Is there any explanation of that amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No explanation accompanies the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I think it ought to be explained. For what purpose is the payment to be made?

Mr. FULTON. I am perfectly willing to take time to explain it, but I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that full explanation is given in the report accompanying the bill.

Mr. KEAN. But I thought this was an amendment to the bill.

Mr. FULTON. It is an amendment, and I will explain it again.

Mr. KEAN. On what page of the report is the explanation given?

Mr. FULTON. The Senator will find it on page 33 of the first report. There are two reports. This bill has been twice reported. It is one of the items that we reported should be eliminated on the second report of the bill. I will state that we reconsidered the items and determined to offer them as amendments. This is one of the amendments. It is based on the findings of fact by the Court of Claims, as follows:

1. It appears from the evidence that Sarah Winter, claimant herein, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the late civil war.

2. During said period the military forces of the United States by proper authority took from the claimant, in Ouachita County, State of Arkansas, property of the kind and character described in the petition which at the time and place of taking was reasonably worth the sum of one thousand three hundred and eighty dollars ($1,380), no part of which appears to have been paid.

Those are the facts in regard to it.

Mr. KEAN. Of what description was the property? It was taken by order of the Government?

Mr. FULTON. Certainly.

During said period—

The military forces of the United States, by proper authority, took from the claimant, in Ouachita County, State of Arkansas, property of the kind and character described in the petition, which at the time and place of taking was reasonably worth the sum of $1,380.

As to the character of property described in the petition, it consisted of 1,000 pounds of dried beef, $400; 2,000 pounds of bacon, $1,500; 1,000 pounds of ham, $850; 30 pounds of beef tongue, $37.50; 10 barrels of flour, $150, and so forth.

Mr. KEAN. Is the Senator sure there were 10 barrels of flour?

Mr. FULTON. That is my recollection, as near as I remember.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill,

The next amendment was, under "California," page 41, after line 3, to insert:

To John M. Forsyth, formerly of Carson, Nev., $2,728.

To Vinnie J. Thompson, as executrix of last will of James M. Thompson, deceased, late of the State of Nevada, $3,730.

To Frank J. McWorthy, now of California, formerly of Nevada, $450.

To Thomas Rodgers, formerly of Virginia City, Nev., $440.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, after line 12, insert the following:

To John Allman, of Oakland, Cal., formerly of Virginia City, Nev., $2,358.

Mr. KEAN. What is his claim?

Mr. FULTON. It is for supplies furnished the army. It was in one of the Indian wars.

Mr. KEAN. It is an Indian war claim?

Mr. FULTON. Yes. I remember it only in a general way. Of course I can turn to the report and give a full explanation of it.

Mr. KEAN. I am unable to find these claims in the copy of the report I have.

Mr. FULTON. There were two reports, as I explained a moment ago. This is one of the items that was stricken out and appeared only in the first report. I do not know whether there are any more copies of the report to be obtained or not. I have one here and I will send it to the Senator if he wants to look at it.

Mr. KEAN. I do not object to the explanation made by the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKETT. Why were the items stricken out may I ask the Senator?

Mr. FULTON. I am almost tempted to ask for a reading of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I have made the statement so often, but of course the Senator is entitled to know why the items were stricken out. It was done because they did not come within the rule the committee thought should obtain in regard to supplies furnished the army. I do not remember this particular item, but there were some elements in it which did not come within the rules we prescribed that the Committee on Claims should follow. For instance, to give the Senator an illustration, many of the southern church claims were for property that had been burned. We refused to allow them, but they were incorporated in the House bill, and we reported by mistake some of them in the first amendments we reported to the House bill. Senators representing the States where the claims had arisen had advised their constituents that the claims were allowed. Then when we struck them out on the second report they were placed in such an embarrassing position that the committee agreed, so far as it was concerned, that it would consent that the items might be restored to the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, under the heading "District of Columbia," on page 42, after line 10, to insert:

The following-named 30 persons the following sums, respectively, as found by the Court of Claims in the case of Richard Emmons and 29 others against The United States:
To Richard Emmons, $425.84.
To George C. Acton, $152.57.
To George W. Ballinger, $182.44.
To Edward R. Barbour, $193.56.
To James Breast, $419.41.
To George R. Cook, $497.88.
To Joshua Cooksey, $331.30.
To John D. Davis, $330.13.
To Philip A. Delano, $337.81.
To Oliver A. Emmons, $106.60.
To William B. Flood, $161.80.
To Samuel S. Fowler, $148.50.
To Theodore Gates, $227.31.
To Thomas J. Harrison, $286.47.
To Richard Holland, $222.68.
To John T. Hardester, $194.16.
To William Kemp, $380.01.
To William H. Krepps, $224.97.
To Abraham Lee, $319.12.
To George E. Luckett, $135.06.
To William Morris, $359.98.
To William E. Miller, $367.28.
To Charles M. Nicholson, $192.49.
To John W. Reed, $242.23.
To Richard Smith, $284.04.
To Isaac Scott, $101.83.
To John A. Smith, $194.16.
To Isaac Smallwood, $89.54.
To Isaac Tillman, $91.27.
To Augustus M. Warfield, $382.99.
To Elizabeth Thomas, of Brightwood, D. C., $1,835.
To Heber L. Thornton and Grayson L. Thornton, trustees under the last will of Gottlieb C. Grammer, deceased, late of the District of Columbia, $2,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Florida," on page 45, after line 14, to insert:

To rector, wardens, and vestry of St. John's Church, Jacksonville, Fla., $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I move, on page 45, after line 16, to insert the following item:

To Richard H. Turner, of Duvall County, in his own right and as administrator of the estate of Eliza Turner and Eliza Ann Turner, deceased, $2,130.

Mr. KEAN. I should like to have an explanation of that amendment. I can not find it in any book that I have.

Mr. FLINT. There are three volumes to find it in.

Mr. KEAN. If the Senator will just tell me what the claim is for, I shall be content.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I have here the finding of the Court of Claims.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] has the finding. I can not, of course, remember all of these cases.

Mr. KEAN. I am aware of that, but I thought the Senator had the report there.

Mr. FULTON. I have it now. Here is the finding of the Court of Claims:

Eliza Turner, deceased, Richard H. Turner, and Eliza Ann Turner were loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the late civil war.

II. During said period the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, for the use of the army, in Duvall County, State of Florida, took from the persons above found loyal property of the kind and character described in the petition, which at the time and place of taking was reasonably worth the sum of $2,130, no part of which appears to have been paid.

Mr. KEAN. It does not say of what the property consisted.

Mr. FULTON. It tells what the property was. It consisted of 1 dwelling house (burned); 6 outhouses (burned); United States gold coin; wearing apparel, trunks, and so forth; bedding and bed linen; silverware; 1 dray and harness; 1 buggy and harness; lot farming implements; 1 sugar mill and kettle; 2½ miles of fence rails (say 13,000 rails), at $20 per thousand; 1 bay saddle horse; 75 head stock, at $10 each; meat; 180 head of hogs, at $3 each; 300 head of chickens, at 50 cents each.

Mr. KEAN. That was a pretty high price for chickens at that time.

Mr. McLAURIN. They were worth it.

Mr. FULTON. I do not know what chickens were worth at that time, but I will say that no allowance is made for the gold coin, as the evidence fails to satisfactorily establish it. The amount that the claimant put in was for $5,811, while the amount which the court finds is only $2,130.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact——

Mr. KEAN. I suppose fence rails and a few of those other valuable things were struck out.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the following item, from line 21 to line 23, on page 45:

To Fannie Crow, administratrix of the estate of Levi Crow, deceased, late of Paulding County, $710.

Mr. HOPKINS. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee and those who are charged with the bill to the fact that this is a claim which was rejected by the Southern Claims Commission.

Mr. FULTON. The case about which the Senator from Illinois inquires, I understand, is that of Fannie Crow, and I have the finding of the Court of Claims in that case. This is an item inserted in the bill in the other House. The committee there did not give as fully the Court of Claims findings as we have it in the Senate committee report to the Senate. The report sets out the findings in full, from which it appears that—

This case, being a claim for supplies or stores alleged to have been taken by or furnished to the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the court, on a preliminary inquiry, finds that Levi Crow, deceased, the person alleged to have furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same are alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

Then follows a statement of the case and the findings:

There was taken from the claimant's decedent, in Paulding County, State of Georgia, by the military forces of the United States during the late civil war, for the use of the army, property of the kind and character above described, which at the time and place of taking was reasonably worth the sum of $710.

The petition alleges—

That she is a citizen of the United States, residing in Paulding County, State of Georgia, where her decedent resided during the late civil war.

That there was taken from her decedent, in Paulding County, State of Georgia, by the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, and appropriated to the use of the army during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, property of the kind and value as follows:

Then it gives a description of the property. Does the Senator care to have that read?

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh, no; not at all. I would ask the Senator, however, in what year was that claim presented and allowed by the Court of Claims?

Mr. FULTON. That was passed on by the Court of Claims on October 31, 1905. That was when the finding was as to the loyalty. It was filed in Congress, in the House of Representatives, on April 22, 1897.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator in charge of the bill that the Southern Claims Commission say that—

A careful reading of all the evidence in the case fails to satisfy us that Mr. Crow remained a loyal adherent to the Union cause throughout the war.

They also say:

The facts proved do not sustain the claimant's earnest professions of loyalty throughout the war. The claim is disallowed.

This report was made in 1877–78. The Senator can see that the Southern Claims Commission, on this question of loyalty or disloyalty during the war, had very much the advantage over the Court of Claims in determining that question with correctness.

It seems to me, on a proposition of this kind, where the Court of Claims forty years afterwards finds that a party is loyal, that the evidence of the Southern Claims Commission should have greater credence with Senators in determining whether a claim of this kind should be allowed.

I simply put this up to the Senator and, of course, will say nothing further upon the question. If the Senator from Oregon, in view of all that is presented here, still thinks that the claim should be allowed, I shall not interpose any objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, of course, as I have said, this claim is one that was passed on by the House committee, and they included it in the bill. I think, so far as I at present understand the reading and finding of the court, we should allow this claim. Still I agree with the Senator from Illinois that these matters ought not any longer to be sent to the Court of Claims. I have been contending for that ever since I have been chairman of the Committee on Claims, but the law provides for them being sent there. The Senate constantly sends them there; parties go before the court and have their hearing and trial. The case comes back here with the findings in favor of the claimant. What are we going to do about it? I admit the testimony is oftentimes, as I am informed, unsatisfactory—that is, in this way: The claimant comes forward with proof of loyalty; that is, some proof. It may be the testimony of some person whose character is good, who is worthy of credit so far as anyone knows, who swears that he knew the party and that he was loyal. The Government can not get anybody to dispute that testimony because the affair happened so long ago. But what is the court going to do? The court is bound to find in accordance with the testimony. The claim comes here for us to pay, and we have to pay it, unless we simply repudiate the findings of the court which we have invited and asked for.

I have no disposition to move to strike the item out. Of course the Senator, if he chooses, can make such a motion.

Mr. RAYNER. May I ask the chairman of the committee whether any amendments will be considered to-day outside of the amendments the committee has agreed to or will agree to under the rule which the Senator has stated?

Mr. FULTON. I can only say to the Senator that I have no hope of finishing the reading of the bill this afternoon. I understand the Senator wants to go away. If he does go away and we should happen to complete the reading of the bill, I will say to him that I shall ask to have it go over, so that he may have an opportunity to offer any amendment he may desire.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the following item, on page 46, lines 1 and 2:

To Plymouth Frazier, jr., of Liberty County, $122.

Mr. HOPKINS. To bring that matter properly before the Senate, I move to strike out that clause.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 46 it is proposed to strike out lines 1 and 2, as follows:

To Plymouth Frazier, jr., of Liberty County, $122.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois on what ground that is put? Is it the same as the Crow case?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state that that is another claim that was considered by the Southern Claims Commission, reported to Congress in the winter of 1877–78, and the claim was rejected by that commission. I would ask the Senator from Oregon what the record is in that case?

Mr. FULTON. The record is that the court on a preliminary inquiry found there was loyalty. The finding is:

This case, being a claim for supplies or stores alleged to have been taken by or furnished to the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the court, on a preliminary inquiry, finds that Plymouth Frazier, jr., the person alleged to have furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same are alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

Then the finding concludes:

FINDING OF FACT.

During the war for the suppression of the rebellion the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, for the use of the army, took from the claimant in Liberty County, Ga., property as above described, which was then and there reasonably worth the sum of one hundred and twenty-two dollars ($122); no part of which appears to have been paid.

The description of the property is as follows:

1 bay mare	$150.00
7 head cattle	140.00
12 head hogs, $4 each	48.00
60 bushels rough rice	90.00
15 bushels of corn	15.00
6 beehives of honey	9.00
10 head of ducks	7.50
25 head chickens	12.50
4 dozen eggs	1.00
Bedding and bedclothes	37.00
Lot of cooking utensils	10.00
Total	520.00

I only say, Mr. President, that if we strike out that item, there is no reason why we should not strike out every one of these items.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the Senator have in his report the evidence upon which the claim was allowed by the Court of Claims?

Mr. FULTON. Oh, no; we only have the findings.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have here, Mr. President, a statement of the Southern Claims Commission, rendered in 1877 and 1878, that I think will be interesting to Senators on both sides of the Chamber:

This claim is a sample of several others: The claimant was a slave and continued such till the capture of Savannah.

I ask the Senator from Georgia if slaves could own property?

Mr. CLAY. I do not know the claimant at all. I think that my colleague [Mr. BACON] does. The fact that he was black or a slave does not make the slightest difference. If the property was taken from him, and it is a just claim, he ought to be paid.

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to ask the Senator whether, under the laws of Georgia, a slave could own property prior to 1864?

Mr. CLAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. Under the laws of Georgia?

Mr. CLAY. He did own property.

Mr. HOPKINS. Was it allowable under the laws of Georgia?

Mr. CLAY. No.

Mr. HOPKINS. It was not.

Mr. CLAY. The master could recognize property on the part of the slave, if he desired to do so.

Mr. HOPKINS. As a matter of fact, slaves were regarded as property themselves, were they not, as much as horses and cattle?

Mr. CLAY. I do not want to discuss that question here now; it is highly improper that I should; but I want to say to the Senator from Illinois that the Southern Claims Commission, to which he refers, was appointed in 1870. It only lasted about a year or two, I think, before the act creating it was repealed. At that time there was a very bitter feeling existing between the different sections of this country. I am glad to know that that feeling no longer exists; that we are, with a very few exceptions, a harmonious, a happy, and a contented people, and that we are willing to give justice to every section of this country.

It is the duty of the Court of Claims, which has been organized for the purpose of hearing these claims, to hear both sides of these cases; to go into the evidence in a judicial way; to ascertain what is the truth; and I presume they have done so. I have not looked into this claim at all. I do not know anything about it. It came from the House of Representatives. I understand it received the unanimous support of the House committee and that there was no objection to it there. It came here; it went to the Senate committee, and was unanimously passed there. Prior to all this, the Court of Claims, after having heard this case, passed upon it and submitted findings. I am quite sure that I would rather trust the judgment of that court than the commission that was appointed in 1870.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, we are all agreed that the happy condition in Georgia to-day is a matter of congratulation to all sections of the country, and what I have said or propose to say on this subject is not to disturb the present condition. It is not to discredit any legitimate claim that comes from that section of the country. Far be it from me, Mr. President, to raise any objection against a legitimate claim from the State of Georgia or any other State in the Union; but when I find that under the laws of that State a slave was not permitted to hold property, and that the report of the commission shows that the man who makes the claim was a slave up to the time of the capture of Savannah by the federal troops, then I think it is time for the Senate to pause in the consideration and the allowance of claims of this character.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] is mistaken when he says that this Southern Claims Commission existed only for a year or two. If he will examine the laws, he will find that it was continued from time to time, and existed, as I now remember, until 1879.

Mr. McLAURIN. Oh, no.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] will examine the law, he will see that I am correct.

Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator contend that the law creating the commission was not repealed until 1879? My recollection is that it was only on the statute books a little over two years.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senator will look at the Southern Claims Commission's reports that are filed in the Senate library, he will find that they were making reports and that this identical report was made to Congress in 1877 and 1878.

Mr. FULTON. I think the commission went out of existence in 1879.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is the statement that I made in answer to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. FULTON. But if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. HOPKINS. When it was first created, as I now remember, it was only to continue for two years, but it was continued until 1879, when these various claims were reported to the Congress.

Mr. FULTON. This is what the Senator had in mind——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. FULTON. This is what the Senator had in mind: The law which provided that no more claims should be presented to the Southern Claims Commission provided that they should not be presented after, I think, March 3, 1878; but the law itself was not passed until March 3, 1878. So it cut them off without any notice whatever.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, on the question of this claim, the objection that I have raised is not limited alone to the law of Georgia at that time——

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. HOPKINS. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. In reference to the matter that has been spoken of by the Senator from Illinois, I will say that the Southern Claims Commission was created by act approved March 13, 1871. On March 3, 1873, that act was repealed, the repealing act using this language:

SEC. 2. That the commissioners of claims shall not receive any petition for the allowance of any claim or claims unless such petition shall be presented to and filed with them on or before the 3d day of March, 1873.

That act was passed on the 3d day of March, 1873, so that the Southern Claims Commission, as a matter of fact, was only in existence about two years.

Mr. FULTON. The commission continued in force, but the time for presenting claims was limited, just as the Senator says.

Mr. FRAZIER. I understand that the commission disposed of the claims that were pending before it, but the right to file claims only existed between 1871 and 1873, a period of about two years.

Mr. FULTON. That is right.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that this is one of the claims that was presented before the Southern Claims Commission, and was included in its report to Congress in the winter of 1877 and 1878. The first objection that they raised was, as I have said, that the claimant was a slave up to the time of the capture of Savannah by the federal troops. They go on then and say in the report:

Then he claims to have owned the above property and to have had it taken from him for army use. How he, a slave, could have owned such and so much property is only explained by the phrase "worked for it." See question 70 and the answer. He and his two colored witnesses give no further explanation as to his ownership. He was the slave of one Thomas S. Mallard. Lyman B. Mallard, the son of Thomas S. Mallard, testifies: "I know he was allowed to own and did own property previous to and during the war by my deceased father, who controlled him at that time." The value of this testimony may be judged of when we notice that this witness was 21 years of age in February, 1878, and was 5 years old at the beginning of the war. His knowledge as to how much this claimant "did own previous to the war" must have been precocious. One B. J. Cassels, a former overseer of the plantation of Mallard, is the attorney who seems to get up these claims. Claim rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HOPKINS. I do.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, upon the particular question which he suggests as to the probability that a negro at that time owned property, I desire to say a few words.

It so happened that I was reared in the county of Liberty, in Georgia, and spent my childhood there, and I am quite familiar with conditions which existed there at the time of the outbreak of the war and for some years previous. My colleague [Mr. CLAY] was not of an age which would enable him to give testimony in regard to conditions then existing which I am now prepared to give.

Mr. CLAY. Am I older or younger than my colleague?

Mr. BACON. I said the Senator was not of an age to give the testimony. He was a little child, and I was quite a grown lad at the time.

Mr. President, there never was a greater misapprehension than that which exists in the popular mind, and has unfortunately existed for more than a generation, not only in this country, but in the world at large, as to the condition of the negroes, as a general thing, in a state of slavery in the Southern States, and the true relation which then existed between the master and the slave. It was not a condition in which there was harshness and cruelty to the slave, and the want of consideration of everything which might be considered humane and kind. That condition was only found in exceptional cases, and those have been portrayed to the world by most slanderous publications as the conditions which existed in general.

The truth was, Mr. President, that it was a patriarchal institution. It was an institution in which the great body of negroes were neither bought nor sold, but were inherited by children from their parents in the same way in which the institution was inherited by the people of the South, and in which the relationship was most kindly and intimate, and in a great many instances affectionate.

There is not now and there has never been at any time, in any land, the relation of master and servant in which there was so much of consideration, so much of kindness, so much of affection, and so much of happiness as that which in general existed in the relationship of master and slave in the Southern States. The slaves were not regarded as chattels and were not treated as such.

The buying and selling of negroes, Mr. President, in the South was not a respectable business; and it is a remarkable fact, which I am glad of the opportunity to state as an incontrovertible fact in this place, that it was not only not a respectable business, but that it was so disreputable a business that to say of a man that he was a professional slave trader would exclude not only himself, but his family, from the more respectable society. To say of a girl that her father, or even her grandfather, was a slave trader would debar her from the best society if found to be true. And it is a stain upon one's lineage to this day. There could be no more significant illustration of the fact of the patriarchal character of the institution of slavery in the South than is found in the recognized detestation of slaveholders themselves of the professional slave dealer.

I am told by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] that there was in Mississippi for many years a statute punishing any man who brought slaves into that State to sell. Among respectable people the buying and selling of slaves, as a general thing, was largely limited to sales for the purpose of division among those who were entitled to that division in estates, and in that case they were generally bought in by those interested; and also in cases where it was necessary to make such sales in order to prevent the separation of husband and wife or parent and child and to keep families together.

Now, of course, I am not here for the purpose of entering into any general consideration or discussion of the question of slavery. It was a fearful curse, for which the whole country—North and South—was responsible, and it was a greater curse to the white man than it was to the negro. But without discussing it I want to state that much as a precursor to the particular facts which I desire to state in regard to the matter about which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] not only expressed doubt, but about which he has such an utter lack of information.

In the particular county where this man lives—and I will pause to say that if he is the man I think he is he is still alive and a respectable man, and a man well thought of in his community. The man referred to in this item of the pending bill is either the particular man I have in mind, or, I have no doubt, some one who is nearly related to him.

When I was a child, in that particular county the system of labor was this: A negro was given what was called a "task." There was a certain amount of plowing he had to do in a day, or a certain amount of other manual labor, and when he had completed it the remainder of the day was his own, to be employed as he saw fit.

The Senator speaks of the fact, or rather the report refers to the fact, that the witness in that case was a child 5 years of age when the war broke out. That would have made him between 9 and 10 when it was concluded. I will say to the Senator that I recollect with the utmost distinctness the condition of affairs which I am now narrating, and much of which occurred at a time when I was between 5 and 10 years of age; because, Mr. President, the relationship was such that the children of the owners of those slaves mingled freely and familiarly with the slaves, went down among what were called their "quarters," where they were gladly received and where there was a mutual interchange of kindness and mutual existence of friendship and affection. I recall with the utmost distinctness that when between 5 and 10 years of age I was acquainted with negroes who lived upon the place, knew about their prosperity, and knew of the fact that they had property, and knew the property itself that they had around them.

In consequence of the condition of affairs which I have stated, it was a very common thing for the industrious negro, the thrifty negro, to get through what was known as his "task" by 2 or 3 o'clock in the day and devote the balance of the day to working a crop for himself. They had comfortable houses with yards and gardens attached, and frequently additional land without rent, where they raised corn and potatoes for themselves, and sometimes a little cotton. It was frequently the case that the negroes had a little cotton to sell. It was almost universally the case that negroes who were thrifty owned property of various kinds—cows, sometimes a horse, chickens without number, and pigs; and my friend on my right [Mr. TALIAFERRO], who was also of an age to remember, although he does not look like it, wants me to insert "dogs." Yes; they had their full share of them.

And, Mr. President, I want to say in the most emphatic language and to bear testimony to the fact that it was not an unusual thing in that time for the thrifty and industrious slave to have property in a greater degree than that which is now spoken of as having belonged to this man Frazier. It is true that under the law he had no legal title to it—none that he could assert in court, except through his master—but it is equally true that his title was universally respected, and I have no idea that a case could be shown where he was ever deprived of his property by his master; and if ever any other person had sought to deprive him of it, his master would have given the wrongdoer cause to remember it for many a day. Under such circumstances, when it was a common thing for a slave to have a greater amount of property than that, will the Senator from Illinois stand in his place and say because that negro could not assert his title in court that if the United States Government took that property and had the benefit of it its value shall not now be paid to him? Does the Senator, after the statement I have made, insist upon any such objection?

Mr. HOPKINS. When the Senator from Georgia is through, I will make a remark or two.

Mr. BACON. I think I have said enough on that line, although I could say a good deal more.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator from Illinois will permit me for just a moment.

Mr. President, I want to say just one word on the question of slaves holding property. I know nothing about this case. I am not at all interested in it. I understand it is for a trifling amount—$120. It was quite the custom in the South, as stated by the Senator, to allow negroes who were slaves to have time of their own.

I want to cite one circumstance with which I am familiar. My father had a good many slaves who did work on the plantation. He had several blacksmiths, one or two carpenters, a man who made wagons, a cabinetmaker, whom I can recall, and a plasterer. I recollect particularly that these men frequently did work for which they themselves received pay. As far as the plasterer was concerned, there being little of that sort of work, he went all over the country disposing of his own time. He paid my father so much a month, and he went wherever he found work to do and made his own contracts and got his own pay. He always had money; how much, I do not know. I can not recollect after this lapse of time whether he owned any property that could have been appropriated or destroyed by the army, but I know he had that liberty. He hired his own time. That was not an uncommon circumstance in that country. I know that to be a fact. So it is not at all improbable that a colored man should own $120 worth of property.

I do not care anything about this claim. I do not care anything about this bill—not a bit—because I have very little sympathy for people who, living in the South, did not aid and abet the rebellion, and I have very little sympathy for those who did and are now willing to tell a lie to get a claim through. So I have very little concern about this. But justice ought to be done all around.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Illinois will pardon me for a moment, I want to say, so far as concerns the statement made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] about negroes having their own time, making money for themselves, and being prosperous, that I knew of a great many instances of that kind. But I want to add one thing. I did not know that I would ever have the opportunity to say it in the Senate of the United States, but the issue raised by the Senator from Illinois gives me the opportunity, and I am glad to avail myself of it.

In illustration of the kindly relationship which existed between the slave owner and the slave, I was reared, Mr. President, as an orphan by an elderly lady, my grandmother, who then had no young children, and most of whom had all left the family before I was old enough to know them. I lived in the country on a farm where there were negroes; a plantation we called it in those days. There was no other white child on the place. There was a negro child on the place who grew up with me. He was about my age. He is living to-day. In all my childhood that boy was my companion. As we grew older and I went to school, during every holiday he and I hunted and fished together, and during the long time which has elapsed since then the affection then formed has never decreased.

I want to give his name. It is Collin James, and while reared in Liberty County, he lives now in Mitchell County, in Georgia. He has prospered and now owns considerable property. When I have visited relatives residing near where he now resides, as I have frequently done, he has driven over in his buggy to see me and to ask me to go hunting with him as in the old days, and I have gone with him and we have lived over again together our boyhood days in the woods. And I want to say here that the affection which existed between that colored boy and myself when we were children—and he is as black as is the Senator's coat—has continued during our lives, and is such now that I can say truthfully to-day that if I had but one crust of bread and he was hungry and had none I would divide it with him, and I am satisfied that if the conditions were reversed he would as surely divide his sole crust with me.

This may seem out of place here, Mr. President, but the suggestion of the Senator from Illinois is based on such a radical misapprehension of the true relations which in that day existed between the master and the slave that I have, on the impulse of the moment, said this much.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, January 15, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate January 14, 1909.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

The following-named paymasters in the navy, who were confirmed on May 20, 1908, to be paymasters in the navy, with the rank of lieutenant-commander, from the 15th day of May, 1908, to be paymasters in the navy, with the rank of lieutenant-commander, from the 17th day of April, 1908, to correct the dates from which they take rank, made necessary by the change in dates of promotion of certain line officers:

George G. Seibels,
Edmund W. Bonnaffon,
Joseph Fyffe, and John H. Merriam.

The following-named naval constructors in the navy, who were confirmed on May 20, 1908, to be naval constructors in the navy, with the rank of lieutenant-commander, from the 15th day of May, 1908, to be naval constructors in the navy, with the rank of lieutenant-commander, from the 17th day of April, 1908, to correct the dates from which they take rank, made necessary by the change in dates of promotion of certain line officers:

Stuart F. Smith and

THURSDAY, January 14, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BAY RUM.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 22884, and consider it now in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I will ask the Clerk to report the amendment striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting the matter offered as an amendment.

The bill as amended was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 22884) more completely to accomplish the objects contemplated by section 3 of the act of April 12, 1900, chapter 191.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of April 12, 1900, chapter 191, is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"That upon bay rum, or any article containing alcohol, hereafter brought from Porto Rico into the United States for consumption or sale there shall be paid a tax on the spirits contained therein of $1.10 per proof gallon, to be collected at the port of entry by the collector of internal revenue of the district in which the port is located. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry this act into effect."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask my colleague if the bill strikes out the retroactive feature?

Mr. PAYNE. It strikes out the whole original bill and substitutes the amendment, which simply puts a tax on the alcohol in bay rum coming from Porto Rico.

Mr. BENNET of New York. As now reported the bill contains nothing of the retroactive feature?

Mr. PAYNE. Nothing at all.

Mr. PARSONS. I will ask my colleague if there is any tax on Porto Rican rum?

Mr. PAYNE. There is none.

I want to explain to the House that two years ago I reported this bill from the Committee on Ways and Means. Then the understanding and information of the committee, from all sources, was that there was no tax imposed upon the alcohol in the bay rum exported to the United States, and we abandoned the bill. Within a month after that the legislature of Porto Rico exempted from the payment of any internal-revenue tax all alcoholic compounds which were exported, or rather, I might say, they allowed a drawback of the full tax if they were exported; and for over two years the bay rum, with the alcohol contained therein, manufactured in Porto Rico and brought into the United States, has come in free of the payment of any internal tax. If our own people manufacture it here, they have to pay the full internal-revenue tax upon the spirits contained in the bay rum, and it is nearly all spirits. Now, the object of this bill is simply to impose the same tax upon the bay rum manufactured in Porto Rico that our people have to pay here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman to yield to me for five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, the question is on getting unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I would like to ask the gentleman, if under the operation of this bill the money would be collected by the authorities of Porto Rico?

Mr. PAYNE. It is to be collected at the ports when the article is imported here.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Prior to the passage of the act to which the gentleman referred by the authorities of Porto Rico it was collected at Porto Rico?

Mr. PAYNE. It was. This makes the money come to us. After we abandoned the act two years ago on that information, the legislature of Porto Rico, within a month afterwards, allowed a drawback on all bay rum coming to this country equal to the amount of the internal-revenue tax, and for two years it has been coming here without the payment of a single cent of tax.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. The operation of the proposed act would be to permit us to collect the money that Porto Rico permitted them to draw back?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Does this place the producer of bay rum in Porto Rico on exactly the same plane as the producer in the United States?

Mr. PAYNE. Exactly, as to the payment of the tax.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. Now I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, when this bill came before the House some time ago some of the minority members of the committee filed a minority report. We had an idea or a belief at that time that the bill in its then form was retroactive, and we were not in favor of that proposition. At the time we filed the minority report there was a tax on alcohol in Porto Rico, which has now been removed; so it changes the entire status of the bill from what it was when we filed the former minority report. The bill as now reported is not retroactive in any respect; there is no tax on alcohol now in Porto Rico, and it is nothing but fair and right that the manufacturers of bay rum in Porto Rico should be placed on the same basis as the manufacturers of bay rum in this country. As I understand it, that is what the bill will do in its present form. So that the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee have no objection to the passage of the bill in its present shape.

But I want to say this, further: The island of Porto Rico lies right off the American coast. It is a sentry box on our southern coast. There is no question that for all time to come the island of Porto Rico will be a part of the United States, and the American flag will fly over it. It is a small island. It is closely connected with the mainland. It will some day become Americanized. We should carry our American institutions to the island as rapidly as possible, and I think the day has come when we should no longer draw a distinction between the revenue laws of Porto Rico and the revenue laws of the United States. Absolute free trade exists between the island and the continent, and, in my judgment, there is no reason whatever why the internal-revenue laws that are now applicable to the States should not be made applicable in their entirety to the island of Porto Rico, and I hope that at some early date the Congress of the United States will take up the question and apply the internal-revenue laws of this country to Porto Rico and draw no distinction.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the island of Porto Rico lay very close to the mainland of the United States. Is the gentleman able to tell us how many miles away it is?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, I think I heard some one say that it is about 1,200 miles.

Mr. MANN. I would not call that very close; but it is considerably farther than that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am comparing the island of Porto Rico with such possessions as the Philippine Islands, that lie 8,000 miles away; and we of necessity are bound for all time to come to hold this island, to make it a part of the United States, and there is no reason why the revenue laws of the United States should not be extended to the island. I hope we may do that at some early date, and avoid all this class of legislation such as we are enacting this morning.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to agree with the gentleman from Alabama in so far that I think the time is approaching when we can extend our internal-revenue laws to Porto Rico. The only thing I have any doubt about is the question of a tax upon cigars and tobacco there. When we refused to do it a number of years ago there was abundant reason, in the fact that people kept little shacks and stores in their houses where they had a quantity of leaf tobacco. One of the natives would come in and the proprietor would twist up a cigar and sell it to him for a cent or 2 cents, and it seemed to be an unnecessary hardship to put upon those people at that time to require the manufacture of cigars under bond, and so forth, and with the heavy tax that is imposed here in the United States.

I think the House sufficiently understands this bill. I will ask to print as a part of my remarks the report, which fully explains it and the conditions which make it necessary.

The report [by Mr. PAYNE] is as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 22884) entitled "A bill more completely to accomplish the objects contemplated by section 3 of the act of April 12, 1900, chapter 191," having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House with an amendment and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

The amendment strikes out all after the enacting clause and inserts in lieu thereof the following:

"That upon bay rum or any article containing alcohol hereafter brought from Porto Rico into the United States for consumption or sale there shall be paid a tax on the spirits contained therein of $1.10 per proof gallon, to be collected at the port of entry by the collector of internal revenue of the district in which the port is located. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is hereby authorized to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry this act into effect."

The bill as amended is identical with H. R. 25122, reported by this committee in the Fifty-ninth Congress, except that there is now added in line 1, after the words "bay rum," the words "or any article containing alcohol." The report on the bill in that Congress was as follows (Report 7095):

"The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 25122) entitled 'A bill to impose a tax on bay rum brought from Porto Rico into the United States,' having had the same under consideration, report it back without amendment with a recommendation that the bill do pass.

"The purpose of this act is to place bay rum imported from Porto Rico and the product of that island on the same basis as to the payment of internal-revenue tax as the bay rum manufactured in the United States.

"The act of April, 1900, imposed upon articles from Porto Rico 'a tax equal to the internal-revenue tax imposed in the United States upon the like articles of merchandise of domestic manufacture.' Under this clause the Treasury Department has been collecting a tax of $1.10 per gallon upon bay rum from Porto Rico. By decision of the circuit court of the eastern district of New York on the 6th day of December, 1906, the court held that, inasmuch as the internal-revenue laws of the United States imposed no tax by their terms upon domestic bay rum, the imposition of such tax upon imported bay rum was unauthorized.

"However, the distilled spirits from which bay rum is manufactured in the United States pay a tax of $1.10 per gallon. These distilled spirits and bay rum escape internal-revenue tax in Porto Rico, and therefore neither the bay rum imported from Porto Rico nor the spirits from which it is manufactured pay any internal-revenue tax. This bill is simply to equalize the conditions and places a tax upon the bay rum imported from that island.

"This legislation is recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and by Secretary Shaw."

After the bill was reported to the Fifty-ninth Congress it was ascertained that, contrary to the information which had been given the committee, there then was an internal-revenue tax in Porto Rico on bay rum equal to the internal-revenue tax in this country, and the bill was therefore not pressed for consideration in the House.

On March 14, 1907, the legislature of Porto Rico amended the act whereby the internal-revenue tax in Porto Rico was levied so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. There shall be levied, collected, and paid—

"(1) On all distilled spirits produced in Porto Rico, or brought into Porto Rico, a tax of 26 cents on each liter or fraction thereof: Provided, That for the purposes of this act all spirituous liquors not otherwise provided for in this act produced in Porto Rico, or brought into Porto Rico, of which, exclusive of water, distilled spirits form the chief component, shall be regarded as distilled spirits.

"(7) On all proprietary medicinal preparations, patent medicines, toilet soaps, perfumery, and cosmetics produced in Porto Rico, or brought or imported into Porto Rico, a tax of 5 per cent ad valorem; Provided, That bay rum, alcoholado, and similar aromatic compound preparations of alcohol, not used as a beverage, shall be considered as perfumery: And provided further, That a drawback shall be allowed on any tax-paid alcohol used in compounding any article referred to in this paragraph when such article is made strictly in accordance with such special regulations as the treasurer of Porto Rico may prescribe.

"Articles subject to tax under the provisions of this act shall be exempt from taxation when exported from Porto Rico under such regulations, and after the making of such entries and executing and filing of such bond, as the treasurer of Porto Rico may prescribe: Provided, That the taxes paid on alcohol which is used in any article manufactured for export shall be refunded: Provided, That the manufacturer register beforehand with a special label the article intended for exportation, and in which case the treasurer shall determine the rules governing such cases in order to analyze the said article and supervise the manufacture of the same, if he should deem it necessary."

The effect of this amendment was to exempt bay rum, etc., coming into this country from Porto Rico and entering into competition with the American product from all internal-revenue tax either in Porto Rico or in this country, and thus rendered the enactment of the proposed bill necessary to give the American product an equal chance in competition with the Porto Rican product.

The Government has been contending that these commodities, when imported to this country, are now subject to our internal-revenue tax, and considerable litigation has been had, but the decisions so far have been adverse to the Government. Already nearly half a million dollars has been collected, under protest, by the Government, but under the decisions of the courts will probably have to be paid back to the importers. The proposed act does not affect importations already made, nor in any way interfere with the cases now pending.

Amend title to read: "An act to impose a tax upon alcoholic compounds coming from Porto Rico, and for other purposes."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the bill and amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENDING PROVISIONS OF CAREY ACT TO NEW MEXICO.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of H. R. 15850, to extend the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and that the bill be considered in the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of the bill H. R. 15850, and that the same be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the provisions of section 4 of the act of Congress approved August 18, 1894, being chapter 301 to Supplement to Revised Statutes of the United States, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and that said Territories upon complying with the provisions of said act shall be entitled to have and receive all of the benefits therein conferred upon the States.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in full force and effect from and after its passage.

The following committee amendments were read:

Line 9, page 1, insert after the word "purposes" the words "and the amendments thereto."

Line 10, strike out the word "Territories" and insert the word "Territory."

Line 11, strike out the words "and Arizona."

Line 11, strike out the word "Territories" and insert the word "Territory."

Amend the title of the bill to conform with the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from what committee this bill comes?

Mr. MONDELL. From the Committee on Public Lands, and it has the indorsement of the Interior Department.

Mr. GARRETT. Is it a unanimous report?

Mr. MONDELL. It is a unanimous report, and has the strong indorsement of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GARRETT. What does it do?

Mr. MONDELL. It extends the so-called "Carey Act" to the Territory of New Mexico; and I propose to offer an amendment cutting out that part of the committee amendment which excepts Arizona, so that the provisions of the act shall extend to Arizona. The Carey Act is the act by which the Federal Government grants to the States arid lands on conditions of their settlement and reclamation.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Does this meet with the approval of the Delegate from Arizona?

Mr. MONDELL. He at first was not certain about the matter, and at his suggestion we amended the bill so as to exclude Arizona; but since that time he has examined into the working of the law elsewhere, and now desires Arizona included. I have a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, which I received day before yesterday, urging that Arizona be included in the provisions of the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. It does not now include Arizona?

Mr. MONDELL. The committee amendment strikes out Arizona; but I intend, if there is no objection, to offer an amendment which will include it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Do I understand that the Delegate from Arizona is in favor of it?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. SMITH, the Delegate from Arizona, is anxious to have the benefits of the bill extended to his Territory. I have a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, dated January 11, in which he says:

From my personal investigations in New Mexico and Arizona I am convinced that there are many opportunities for reclamation under the Carey Act, and urge that your committee recommend favorably the enactment of a bill extending that act to both the Territories.

Mr. GARRETT. Would the gentleman be willing to let this go over until the Delegate from Arizona is here?

Mr. MONDELL. The Delegate from Arizona has on several occasions asked that this amendment be adopted so as to include Arizona.

Mr. GARRETT. Will not the gentleman offer it now and let it all go together?

Mr. MANN. That is what he proposes to do. Now, if the gentleman will yield to me for a question——

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. This bill refers to the Carey Act and amendments thereto. Does that give more than 1,000,000 acres?

Mr. MONDELL. No. There are two amendments to the original Carey Act which somewhat modify its provisions.

Mr. MANN. They are all separate laws?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; the so-called "Carter" and the later amendments are specifically amendments to the Carey Act, whereas the provisions he refers to are in no sense amendments to the act.

Mr. MANN. How much land has been taken in Idaho and Wyoming during the last year?

Mr. MONDELL. The last report from the Secretary of the Interior was dated February 4. Since that time my information is that Idaho has taken several hundred thousand acres, and in Wyoming I think about 150,000 acres have been applied for.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. HARDWICK. By this bill you are taking lands that belong to the United States Government and giving them to the Territory?

Mr. MONDELL. It is not a grant in that sense. It is a provision under which the States obligate themselves, under rules and regulations fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, to bring about reclamation of the land and its settlement.

Mr. HARDWICK. Under the present law a man in our State would have certain laws to comply with, and would that system be changed if this bill was passed?

Mr. MONDELL. This is a law that has been in force a number of years in all the arid-land States. Those States have been operating under this law, but it never applied to the Territories. It has worked well in the arid-land States, and now the Territories are anxious to have the law extended to them.

Mr. HARDWICK. This has never been applied before to a Territory?

Mr. MONDELL. No.

Mr. HARDWICK. Can the gentleman give any reason why the original act did not extend to the Territories?

Mr. MONDELL. I imagine it was not considered wise to extend the act to the Territories until it had been tested in the States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was there any difference by reason of the organic constitution that prevented it applying to the Territories?

Mr. MONDELL. I think not.

Mr. STAFFORD. The act could as well be applied to the territorial government as to the state government?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; I think so.

Mr. HARDWICK. There is this reason why it ought not to be applied: That after the States are organized and assume all the functions of the local government, that they might very well be trusted to take care of the lands within their own borders; but while a body of land constitutes a Territory of the United States and is under the direct government of Congress, there might be a different rule necessarily applied.

Mr. MONDELL. It has been suggested and urged that the law if good—which it has been proven to be—might very properly apply to the Territories, because, as to the Territories, the authority of the Secretary of the Interior is more direct, and therefore it is easier for him to administer the law in the Territories than in the States.

Mr. HARDWICK. In the gentleman's judgment, will the passage of this act tend to open these lands to actual homestead settlers?

Mr. MONDELL. I believe it will lead to a large amount of settlement and cultivation of lands now valueless and uninhabitable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I am reserving the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be glad to know whether there is objection.

Mr. GARRETT. I desire to know a little more about it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. What is the effect under the Carey Act if a State fails to perform the conditions precedent to the grant? I am not familiar with the Carey Act, I will say.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it does not get the land.

Mr. MONDELL. The Secretary may decline to issue any patents whatever until the land has been fully reclaimed.

Mr. GARRETT. If the State fails to comply?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It does not get the land unless it does comply.

Mr. REEDER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendment, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 23351. An act for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 23866. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 106. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of permits to the Committee on Inaugural Ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc.

ISSUING PATENTS TO CERTAIN LANDS TO BOISE, IDAHO.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (S. 6136) authorizing the Secretary of War to issue patents to certain lands to Boise, Idaho, and to consider the same in the House at this time, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will suspend. The Chair supposed that this bill was on the Union Calendar, and the Chair desires to state to the House and to the gentleman that on examination it seems to be upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. Therefore the Chair, following the practice which the Chair has followed during the occupancy of the same by the present Speaker, will exercise his right as a Member to object. It has been the practice for the Chair not to submit unanimous requests for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar, that being the method which the Chair, as a Member of the House, has of objecting. Those bills have a day and are so numerous that it would be impossible with safety, in the opinion of the Chair, to consider them in this way.

Mr. MANN. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this bill belongs on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair inquired. This seems to be a license for an acre of land to the city of Boise, revocable.

Mr. MANN. A public corporation?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it has been usual for bills of this kind granting lands to municipal corporations or to an individual to be placed upon the Private Calendar. The Chair in principle does not see any reason for the practice of the House, and the bill is on the Private Calendar in harmony with the practice of the House heretofore.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to its consideration, Mr. Speaker.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 25392, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Acordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. OLMSTED in the chair.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill, when,

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to page 4, to an item which was passed over.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. What page?

Mr. MANN. Page 4. The item was passed over with a point of order pending. I withdraw the point of order and offer this amendment:

On page 5, after the words "United States," insert "one-half," and at the end of line 5 insert "and one-half as miscellaneous receipts."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois recurs to the last paragraph on page 4, which was passed without prejudice at the time it was reached in the regular order of reading the bill with a point of order pending made by the gentleman from Illinois. He now withdraws that point of order and offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 4, after the words "United States," insert the word "one-half," and at the end of line 5 insert "and one-half as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. MANN. The amendment is agreeable to the gentleman in charge of the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would hardly say that the amendment is agreeable to the committee, but the object of the committee is so much desired that we yield to the gentleman's amendment rather than have the whole paragraph stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

For installing a dairy, including the erection of buildings, purchase of cattle, and the necessary fixtures for the same, $2,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the last paragraph. I ask the gentleman what is the object of installing a dairy at the Home for the Aged and Infirm?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, a twofold object. There are something over 200 old people, very feeble and incapacitated, and it is believed that the milk derived from a dairy on the farm will be to the advantage of those persons rather than to send out to other dairies or to the neighborhood to buy the milk. That is one thing. Another thing is that this Home for the Aged and Infirm is located on an exceedingly poor tract of land. They are trying to bring it up and raise as much as they can there, and a dairy will contribute to that end, serving a twofold purpose, and it is believed to be in the interest both of health and economy that it be established.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman that these inmates will be able to do milking or to do any work in connection with this dairy?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No, sir; I did not advance that, and yet there are some of them who could serve in this capacity if they would.

Mr. MANN. Well, it takes pretty strenuous fingers to do milking. Now, does the gentleman think for a moment that this milk can not be obtained of private parties cheaper than from a dairy under government supervision?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Possibly, if that were the only object, it might be true; but I have already called attention to the greater consideration which had its influence with the committee. Taking the two together, I think the gentleman's question could be answered in the negative.

Mr. MANN. How large a farm is this?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. There are some—it is only recollection—two or three hundred acres altogether. It has on the same tract of land a school or reformatory for colored boys, and the superintendents of both institutions are trying to improve the soil.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman himself a dairyman of experience at any time.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No, sir; I am nothing but a "Gardner." [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MANN. Then, I will not ask the gentleman how much, including the erection of buildings, necessary fixtures, and purchase of cattle, and so forth, he could establish for $2,500.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Oh, well, this need not necessarily be the end——

Mr. MANN. That is what I suspected.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Wait a minute—and at the same time to serve the object in view.

Mr. MANN. Is there any more reason for establishing a dairy at this home than a dairy for any other of the eleemosynary institutions which are maintained by governmental authority?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes. This is an isolated institution, several miles from town. There is no other community near it except across the Potomac at Alexandria. They have bought a tract of land which is capable of being improved, and rather than draw fertilizers 9 miles from the city, as is now being done to bring up the land, it is believed, as I said before, that a twofold purpose can be served by means of this dairy.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not think the Government ought to go into that business. I can see no reason why the Government should undertake to provide a milk dairy with a large herd of cows rather than to purchase milk from private persons.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. They have a herd at the National Training School under government supervision and nobody questions the wisdom of that.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, that is where the persons themselves do the work, and the main object of having the herd is to give actual instruction and work to the inmates, but here you are talking about aged and infirm people taking care of a herd of cattle.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If the gentleman will allow me to say, the insane asylum has a herd also. That is hardly for the instruction of the occupants of the insane asylum.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how that may be, I am sure. They have plenty of people who can milk. Nor do I know how profitable it is.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And again, the Soldiers' Home has a herd.

Mr. MANN. Very likely, and we will soon have a large number of dairy herds around here.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. And in every instance, so far as we know, they are a good thing.

Mr. MANN. Now, can the gentleman tell us what is the cost of production of milk by these public dairy herds?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. They go into the general expenses of the institution.

Mr. MANN. They are kept separately in most every other place. The ordinary farmer would be able to tell you the cost of production of milk which he produces if he were keeping a dairy, and yet the Government can not tell. They hide it probably behind other things because the cost of production is so great.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not necessarily. There is not a soldiers' home, so far as I know, in the United States that has not its dairy. Almost every eleemosynary institution where they have the land has its dairy. It is believed to be economical and for the health of the inmates alike. The gentleman simply begs the question because he does not know.

Mr. MANN. And because the gentleman in charge of the bill is unable to inform him as to the facts. That is the principal reason.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. But experience throughout the country justifies what has been done.

Mr. MANN. I may not know, and I do not know, what it costs to maintain these dairy herds at the various eleemosynary institutions, but I do know that those institutions are constantly milking the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think I have visited all of the various eleemosynary institutions located in the District of Columbia, and I may say in conclusion that the inmates of this institution need this as much or more than in any other.

Mr. MANN. I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr Chairman, I would like to hear the grounds upon which the gentleman contends this is out of order.

Mr. MANN. Very well, Mr. Chairman. This provides for the erection of buildings at this institution not now authorized by law, which of itself makes it subject to a point of order. There is no authority in the law creating this institution or providing for it authorizing the construction of buildings for the carrying on of a dairy.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the Government authorized the establishment of this home and the erection of the permanent buildings thereon. It purchased a large tract of land. The committee has made appropriations from time to time for the betterment of the institution and its growing necessities as they have been required. This is simply in line with the current necessities of the institution and for its annual needs and along the lines of its natural development. If this is out of order, we can not make any improvement, it would seem, of a permanent nature without definite action on the part of the House. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BURLESON), who is on the committee, says that we could not even establish a laundry, but we all see the necessity for it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if they had originally provided for the construction of certain buildings out there with a limited cost, which did not include a laundry, they could not establish a laundry without a new authorization of Congress. Whether that is the case or not is not the question here. Here is a plain concession. There is no authority in the law creating this institution or providing for it, authorizing a dairy at all, authorizing the purchase of cattle for a dairy, or authorizing the construction of buildings for a dairy. It is an entirely new department, and if the gentleman was of the opinion that he could establish a dairy there without specifically providing for it, if it was already covered so far as the congressional authority is concerned, all he would need to do would be to increase the amount of money for the necessary items for this institution and the comptroller and the auditor would pass them. But the auditor would not pass an expenditure for this purpose, because it is not authorized now by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Michigan whether there is a limit of cost in the original authorization for buildings at this place?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I understand there is none; absolutely none.

The CHAIRMAN. No authorization for necessary buildings without limit of cost?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. There was no limitation of cost, I am told by the clerk of the committee. We are looking up the law to be sure. [After a pause.] Mr. Chairman, I am in error to this extent: There was originally a limit, but we are not sure whether it has been reached.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a limit of cost?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes. I will ask to have this read, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. The limit of cost applies to certain buildings. It does not apply to dairy buildings or authorize them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Municipal almshouse: For the purchase by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of a suitable site in the District of Columbia for a municipal almshouse, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; for the preparation of plans for suitable buildings for such almshouse, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $27,500; and the total cost of such almshouse, exclusive of site, and including water supply, heating, ventilating, and lighting apparatus, and improvements of grounds, shall not exceed $125,000: Provided, That if acceptable to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to them a site for said almshouse the tract of land containing about 60 acres belonging to the United States lying south of Congress Heights and east of Nichols avenue, and detached from the present site of the Government Hospital for the Insane; and in the event of this acceptance and transfer, the said sum of $25,000 shall be available for construction of the buildings for the said almshouse, $27,500.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, allow me to say that that provided, as I understand it, for necessary additional buildings; but whether the limit of cost has been reached, I am unable to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think that it is incumbent upon the proponents of the appropriation to show that the limit of cost has not been reached to make the item in order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We would not be able to produce the figures for that now. The limit of cost was for the establishment of the institution, but it provides for the establishment of additional buildings.

Mr. MANN. At a total cost not to exceed $125,000. The question is whether that limit has been reached.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That was some years ago, and whether the limit has been reached in order to have that data in order to establish it or not we would have to reckon it up.

Mr. MACON. Are there other buildings there which included would be worth $125,000?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is difficult to say. It is 9 miles from town, and I can not tell.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that if the data is available he could have this paragraph passed until it could be obtained.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It was some ten years ago, and they would have to look through the records to make a compilation. But suppose the limit has been reached——

Mr. MANN. Which, of course, it has.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Suppose it has——

Mr. MANN. Which, I say, of course, it has.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Or even been exceeded——

Mr. MANN. Which, also, of course, it has.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan (continuing). There was a building on an adjoining property, on the same farm, for another institution, a building that will cost more than this proposed addition, under a direct appropriation by the District Committee, and no question was raised.

The CHAIRMAN. That was because no point of order was made against it. The Chair thinks that under all the circumstances of the case that, although this makes a very small departure, one of only a few hundred dollars, in order that the rulings all may be consistent, the Chair will have to sustain the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary additional outbuildings, the procurement of milk as an essential item of diet for inmates, by the purchase of cattle or otherwise, $2,500.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman. Probably, I do not remember, whether they can provide for additional outbuildings; I do not think under the limitation of cost they can without authorization. So far as the procurement of milk is concerned, I have no doubt that they can provide for the procurement of milk, but they can not provide for the manner of the procurement, because it is legislation. If they can say by buying cattle or otherwise, they can say that they shall be bought from John Smith or Jim Jones, or anybody else they choose, which is pure legislation. If an appropriation for the procurement of milk will, in the opinion of the Auditor of the Treasury Department and the Comptroller of the Treasury, permit the purchase of cattle, it is a decision as to what the law is, and they can purchase the cattle; but if under an item for the purchase of milk the comptroller would not permit them to purchase cattle, then it falls within the rules of the House, because it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to see any distinction between this amendment and that originally offered, except in the procurement.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, Mr. Chairman, have you ruled?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Then I offer another amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph:

"For expenses of procuring milk, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent yesterday. As a member of the subcommittee, I am especially interested in the item relating to street lighting, and I ask unanimous consent to go back to that item, for the purpose of enabling me to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman indicate the page of the bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Page 39, line 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to recur to the page indicated.

Mr. MADDEN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. For the purpose of offering an amendment, which the Clerk will read for information.

Mr. MADDEN. Following the word "Washington," on page 39, line 2.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "Washington," line 2, page 39, insert:

"Provided, That no payment shall be made for gas purchased under the provisions of this bill which shall contain more than 10 per cent of carbon monoxide."

Mr. MADDEN. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall be compelled to make a point of order on the amendment, anyhow.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, there is no point of order that can be made on this. This is not a piece of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to recurring to that part of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. BURLESON. He can offer it at the end of the bill.

Mr. MANN. I think he should offer it in the proper place.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I understood consent had been given to return to the paragraph and that the amendment was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair directed that the amendment be read for information.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think the amendment is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Is there objection to recurring to the page?

Mr. FINLEY. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman to explain his amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. If there is going to be an objection here, I would rather make the explanation at the point where I offer the amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think it can be offered anywhere in the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. It can be offered at any time.

Mr. MADDEN. I thought it would be more in keeping to offer it in connection with the item to which it relates than anywhere else in the bill, and therefore my wish to return to the item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. I reserve my right to object, and ask the gentleman to explain his amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Chemical analysis of the gas furnished to the people of the District of Columbia shows that it contains from 20 to 30 per cent of carbon monoxide. The ordinary quantity of carbon monoxide contained in illuminating gas runs from 6 to 7 per cent. Some of the cities of the country and some of the States of the Union limit the quantity of carbon monoxide that can be contained in gas to 10 per cent. I believe that Boston does this, and some other cities of the country also do.

There have been serious accidents in the District of Columbia as a result of the quality of gas which is furnished here. My recollection is that lives have been lost as a result of the large quantity of carbon monoxide contained in the gas. Experts have reported that the gas furnished the people here, containing as it does from 20 to 30 per cent of carbon monoxide, is so dangerous that the people have been recommended to use denatured alcohol for heating and cooking.

Mr. FINLEY. I am satisfied with the gentleman's explanation. I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to take advantage of the fact that my colleague was necessarily absent yesterday; but does he not think that on a matter of this importance there should be an opportunity to know something about it by a report from a committee? The gentleman himself is quite an expert in reference to gas. He has studied the subject of municipal gas supply and knows a great deal about it. Yet it seems to me when we have a committee here that has the right of way every other Monday, which committee has this matter pending before it by a message from the President, and I suppose has given consideration to the subject, it is due to the House to have knowledge from the committee rather than to take it up on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I presume that ordinarily the proper method of procedure would be through the legislative committee of the House having jurisdiction of the subject. I was not aware that this committee had the matter in charge.

I felt that the case was of sufficient importance to have consideration given to it.

Mr. MANN. It is being considered on the message of the President transmitting a lot of information in regard to the matter.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to infringe on the rights of any committee that is giving consideration to the subject which the importance demands. Is there any gentleman here on the District Committee who knows whether this subject is being considered by that committee or not?

Mr. MANN. I may say that a message came from the President a few days ago transmitting a lot of information secured by Doctor Wiley, and it has been referred to the District Committee.

Mr. MADDEN. I would be very glad if any gentleman serving on the District Committee could certify that there is consideration being given to this subject; and if so, I will withdraw my amendment pending the report of that committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the request of the gentleman from Illinois I will say that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia have sent two bills to the District Committee; one of them prohibits any water gas at all, and the other permits 10 per cent, and they have asked the committee to make a choice between the two bills. Doctor Wiley, it seems, has made no choice, and the commissioners refuse to make a choice. This morning we instructed the chairman of the committee to request the District Committee to take the matter up with the commissioners and Doctor Wiley and ascertain which of the two propositions is the more desirable.

Mr. MADDEN. I have suggested 10 per cent as the limit of carbon monoxide.

Mr. CAMPBELL. No member of the committee knows anything about the subject. We did not know carbon monoxide gas from any other gas. The question is under consideration by the committee, in the manner I have stated.

Mr. MADDEN. Has it been referred to a subcommittee to give it special consideration?

Mr. CAMPBELL. We are going to have the matter before the full committee as soon as we get the information. The chairman has been instructed to take the matter up with the District Commissioners and Doctor Wiley.

Mr. MADDEN. Is there any hope of getting a report from the committee in the near future?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can only speak for one member of the committee. I think, however, I am safe in saying that the sentiment of the committee is for giving every protection to the consumers of gas here and prohibiting the poisonous gas.

Mr. BURLESON. Is there any prospect of a report on either one of these bills?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has been referred, as I have stated, and whichever bill is said to be the best—the one that will safeguard the consumers the best—will be presented.

Mr. BURLESON. Will it be reported upon the next District day?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can not say the next District day, but as soon as it can be reached.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment, in view of what has been said.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard a moment, and if necessary I will renew the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, for the purpose of making a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order except by unanimous consent. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Tennessee to ask unanimous consent to return to this paragraph?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to speak on this particular thing. I want to get some information, and I want to give some information.

Mr. GILLETT. I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the objection, or does he reserve it?

Mr. GILLETT. I reserve it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The inquiry and statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] was very significant and timely. This House knows, or certainly the senior Members in service know, what a struggle it has been for the District of Columbia to get cheaper gas. For years and years—I think some eight or ten years, and perhaps twelve—we have been struggling to get cheaper gas, and I believe we have about accomplished the fact. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if I am not right?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. MADDEN] has nothing to do with the price of gas.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know that, but the gentleman from Texas has expressed righteous solicitude as to this matter—and he has had some experience in this House—in asking the gentleman from Kansas what the probability is as to getting a law regulating the use of this deadly gas. The newspapers of the District have been teeming for the last week or ten days with information that this gas is deadly. Now, suppose we get no report from this committee. The gentleman from Texas has just stated to me this gas has killed three or four people. It is deadly whether it has killed anybody or not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gas is so deadly, why permit 10 per cent of monoxide in it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Exactly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know anything about it, and no member of the committee knows anything about it, and we have asked for information.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Kansas has stated that the District Committee has received from the commissioners two bills—one that permits no portion of this deadly gas to be manufactured, and another that permits 10 per cent of it; and then he asks me, Why permit any?

Then I want to ask my friend why delay to ask the three District Commissioners of this city which bill they want? Why does not this great law-making body go to work at it? The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] is as intelligent as any man on this floor, and is patriotic and just, and loves the people of this District and of this country as much as I do or does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. I would not wait a minute if the commissioners want to straddle around on this question as to whether or not the people of this District shall live or die. It is a question of policing the lives of the innocent people of this District—boys and girls, old and young.

For my part, if I was on that committee I would not ask any man whether he approved of this bill or not, with all due respect to my distinguished and good friend from the State of Kansas. If this matter were presented now I would vote for this amendment, and I regret that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], so accomplished in all that he undertakes, so wise in legislation, should have interposed an objection, and for this reason only we may not get any bill from that committee.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it possible for the monoxide gas to be any more deadly than much of the gas we get in this Chamber? [Laughter.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Judging from the statement of the gentleman as made, I do not think it is very deadly, though it may be possibly intended to be poisonous and deadly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Which of the two propositions submitted by the commissioners to the District Committee would the gentleman from Tennessee favor?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would say no water gas, if it is deadly, and then we can bring it here before this committee and this great body and adjust the matter and save the people of this District, and then it goes to the great Senate, where it can be sifted, and then to the President and his great Cabinet.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am informed that even then it would contain 6 per cent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, that is better than too much, and better than 10. What I fear, and why I have said a word, is that judging by the fact that a reduction in the price of gas took us from ten to twelve years to accomplish, because the gas concerns opposed it, and possibly other influences of which I have no knowledge, they now say that they will continue the fight on this gas reform, and will continue to sell to the people of the city of Washington this deadly gas.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reform School for Girls: Superintendent, $1,200; treasurer, $600; matron, $600; 3 teachers, at $600 each; overseer, $720; 6 teachers of industries, at $480 each; engineer, $600; assistant engineer, $420; night watchman, $480; 2 laborers, at $300 each; in all, $9,900.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to send to the desk and have read in my time, without desiring in the least to discuss the matter or take up a moment's time of the committee, a letter which I found on my desk as I came into the Chamber a few moments ago touching upon the playgrounds debate of yesterday. The letter is from Mr. W. A. Croffut, of Washington, D. C., 140 B street NE. I do not know the gentleman. There is a postscript to the letter, which reads as follows:

Mr. GAINES is at liberty to use any of this information that will serve his purpose. It will cost him nothing and is furnished pro bono publico. Mr. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS knows me well.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. GAINES: I listened with great interest to your admirable speech of yesterday on the question of schools, parks, and playgrounds and have called this morning, in anticipation of a renewal of the debate to-day, to give you some points which you may need concerning the matter.

We have in the city of Washington parks and squares as follows:

	Acres.
Executive Mansion grounds	18
President's Park	63
Monument grounds	78
Smithsonian grounds	58
Henry and Seaton parks	32
Garfield Park	24
Howard University Park	12
Judiciary Square	19
Mount Vernon Square	2
Franklin Square	4
Lafayette Square	6
McPherson and Farragut squares	2
Rawlins Square	1
Lincoln Park	6
Stanton Park	3
Folger and Marion parks	2
Washington Circle	1
Du Pont Circle	2
Iowa Circle	2
Takoma Park	739
Zoological Park	171
Rock Creek Park	1,605
Soldiers' Home grounds	502
Analostan Park	540
River Park (reaching from Capitol through islands in the Potomac	1,800
Grand total	5,692

Or 9⅛ square miles of parks, besides 147 triangles and circles.

Besides the table of park acreage, which I have left you in the hands of your secretary, permit me to add that your ridicule of the pretense that children need to be directed and superintended in their play seems to me to have been well placed. As Alexander's sole requirement was "get out of my sunshine," so I think all that children require is plenty of room. Instead of requiring attention, they require inattention; instead of being superintended, they want simply to be let alone. Very often when children are playing the whole spirit of their play is broken up by the knowledge that they are noticed by adults. The consciousness of being superintended is enough to spoil the enjoyment of any flock of children in the world. I think the children ought to be freely admitted to all parts of every one of our parks, even at the risk of tramping down the grass, on the ground that children are more valuable and important to the welfare of the city than even verdure. The largest parks in Europe are always open to women and children, even at the risk of the sort of "desecration" that they may suffer thereby. In London, those vast and choice spaces—Hyde Park, St. James Park, Victoria Park, Kensington Park, and other parks, are always free to the entrance of women and children, and thousands live in them all summer long. The same is true of the Grand Tuileries of Paris, and not even its majestic and painful history protects it from the invasion of the multitude.

The Clerk read as follows:

For care and treatment of indigent patients, under a contract to be made with the George Washington University Hospital by the board of charities, $3,000.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to this $94,000 which is appropriated to be paid to nine different hospitals for the care of indigent patients. I would like to ask whether these different sums are donations made by the Government to these hospitals or whether the hospitals are actually under contract to spend the money for the care of indigent patients—that is, whether or not there is so much paid for each patient or the whole sum is given to the hospital without regard to whether it cares for a certain number of indigent patients or not?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would say to the gentleman that these sums are appropriated subject to expenditure under contract. They are required to care for patients at so much a day and present a bill for the number of patients so cared for, and are paid out of these various sums as the money is earned.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then, if the whole amount is not earned, what becomes of it?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It reverts to the Treasury.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Then ought not these appropriations to be not to exceed so much instead of the whole sum?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. They do not exceed that. If they do exceed it, they have nothing to draw from.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Temporary Home for Ex-Union Soldiers and Sailors, Grand Army of the Republic, namely: For superintendent, $1,200; janitor, $360; and cook, $360; maintenance, $3,580; in all, $5,500, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and ex-soldiers and sailors of the Spanish war shall also be admitted to the home.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if there is any authority of law for this home; and whether there is or not, what is the necessity for it?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to say that this institution, if you can call it such, was established by authority of law, but it is one of those—and it does not stand alone—which has been recognized by the House since 1890, and for which appropriations have been made each succeeding year. Are there any further questions as to the necessity of it?

Mr. MANN. As to the necessity of it, of course I know there is no authority.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. As to the necessity of it, there may be a difference of opinion as to that; but it takes care of the stranded soldiers of the Spanish-American war and of the civil war visiting this city. I may say that I have visited the home several times, and I know——

Mr. MANN. Is it down here on Pennsylvania avenue?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; it is just off from Pennsylvania avenue, beyond the Botanical Garden. I know of no institution so economically managed, and I may say to the gentleman further that there was an effort made several years ago to buy a tract of land with a building upon it looking to a permanent institution of this kind.

Mr. MANN. The effort is still being made; they have a bill on the calendar reported from the House committee, and another bill on the calendar which has passed the Senate, which caused me to look the subject up. To be frank with the gentleman, I thought it was as much of a fake as anything I have run across recently in the way of eleemosynary institutions.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The institution or the proposed institution?

Mr. MANN. The institution itself.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, I would hardly think that, but I want to say that I think the House ought to watch very carefully and consider deliberately before establishing another soldiers' home in this city, but I do believe that it will be well to allow this institution to remain as it is now.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman know the average number of the inmates in this home? As I understand, they claim they keep nobody longer than ten days, but, as a matter of fact, they run out of inmates and let people stay as long as they want to.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has been incorrectly informed, because at times they have not been able to take care of all who applied for admission; at least I have been so informed by the superintendent of the home, and whenever I have been there I have found it taxed to its capacity.

Mr. MANN. What is the capacity; does the gentleman remember?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; but I should say, at a guess, 30 to 40.

Mr. MANN. During the last fiscal year, or during the fiscal year 1907, they had a total of persons there amounting to 6,000 for the year.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Some of them did not stay the night, but only for a meal.

Mr. MANN. So much as a meal or a day, 6,000 persons, counting each meal or each day for a person, you see, would be on an average not over 16 a day.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Well, I say it is a guess; simply my recollection as to the number. I would not state it positively, because I have not the information at hand now. I did have it two or three years ago, for I investigated it with some care.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have the information at hand, but if the gentleman thinks himself we ought to let the appropriation stay I shall not insist upon the point of order, although if these people try to go any further with their other bills and I have the chance again——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think I am with you on that.

Mr. MANN (continuing). I will try to make the point of order on this item.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I now offer an amendment to the section. Add after the word "war," line 8, the words "and the war with Mexico."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 84, line 8, after the word "war" insert the words "and the war with Mexico."

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, allow me to say I am heartily in accord with that amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Personally, I think this item ought to go out of the bill. I see no reason why a home should be maintained within the District of Columbia for ex-soldiers of the Union Army and the Spanish-American war than for any other citizens of the United States. It has been only a few years since the Spanish-American war and those who participated in it are comparatively young men, just as able to work and provide for themselves as other citizens of our country.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the overwhelming majority of the men who served in the Spanish-American war, while entering with patriotic motives, regarded it more of a lark than anything else, and their short service was a round of pleasure rather than a matter of great discomfort or danger to them. Many of them, it is true, are attempting to find for themselves places on the pension rolls, and doubtless will ultimately succeed, but I see no reason why a home should be maintained here in Washington for them at the expense of the people, where they can be served free of cost. But, Mr. Chairman, if the Congress intends to maintain a home for these soldiers, I see no reason why the soldier of the Mexican war should be discriminated against. I doubt if any soldier of the Mexican war would ever apply for admission to this home. I am inclined to believe they will not. But if one of these old soldiers should do so, I think the same privileges should be accorded him as is accorded to the soldiers of the civil war and to the young soldiers of the Spanish-American war.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman also include the war of 1812 and the Revolutionary war?

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman may offer that amendment, if he wishes.

Mr. KEIFER. I wish to say a word, not in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], because if there is any necessity for the amendment it might go in the bill, but the Mexican war was concluded a little over sixty years ago, and there are very few, if any, of those old soldiers in the District of Columbia probably, and, if so, they are cared for otherwise. I am not going to oppose the amendment, but I want to say in answer to the gentleman's suggestion about the recent Spanish war being a mere "lark" that he is greatly mistaken. There were in that war, from his own State, some splendid officers and soldiers who would not agree with him, and some died by reason of the service there—some of the most distinguished of the officers that were in that or in any other war. They are in my mind now—Col. W. H. Mabry, of Texas, is a marked example of these—and I do not care to go into a discussion of what resulted from the Spanish war, but I do not think I ought to stand mute in the presence of such ridicule applied to it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] how many years this policy has been enforced, and whether or not a demand for increased appropriation has continued to grow year by year?

Mr. BURLESON. We appropriate about the same amount from year to year.

Mr. COX of Indiana. It has been substantially the same?

Mr. BURLESON. The first appropriation was made in 1890, and was for $2,500. In the year 1904 it was increased to $4,000, and in the year 1905 to $5,500, and it has carried that same amount continuously since.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Does this home for the ex-Union soldiers and sailors own its own real estate?

Mr. BURLESON. I think it is the building occupied by the superintendent, and owned by the superintendent probably, or rented by him.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman state whether or not there is any ex-soldier or soldiers of the Spanish war that continue to stay here permanently, or is it only transiently?

Mr. BURLESON. I am unable to give the gentleman the information. I doubt exceedingly myself whether this item ought to be continued in the bill.

Relying to what was said by my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER], I assure him I had no purpose or desire to belittle or ridicule the soldiers who served valiantly in the Spanish-American war, but I have gathered an impression somewhere that there were very few men who enlisted for that war who actually engaged in battle; that, in truth, there were not very many sanguinary conflicts that took place during that unfortunate war. I heartily concur in what my distinguished friend from Ohio has said about the valor of the Spanish-American soldier, and especially what he has said of the distinguished soldier from Texas.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Transportation of paupers: For transportation of paupers, $2,500.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after line 15, page 85, the following:
"That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be authorized and directed, after due investigation, to prepare and put into immediate operation a more reasonable scale of charges by cabs, taxicabs, and other public vehicles for the transportation of passengers in the District of Columbia, and thereafter the tariff so prepared shall be the maximum charges that may be collected in the District of Columbia."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I was going to say that I would not make the point of order. The object is so apparent and so worthy that I had hoped we might have a vote upon it.

Mr. MANN. Let us see what the effect of it will be first. I have no desire to maintain high charges for taxicabs, but would like to have them some lighter if they could be; but still what will be the result of this; will it be higher or lower charges?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is to provide for more reasonable charges.

Mr. MANN. More reasonable to the people who travel or for those who hire?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if he can make it any more certain that there will be a reduction of fares, I will cheerfully accept any amendment that he may offer to this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Who fixes the fares now?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The Commissioners of the District fix them under this resolution.

Mr. MANN. Then this confers no authority on them?

Mr. SLAYDEN. It compels them forthwith to make a revision and to put into effect a more reasonable scale of charges, and fix that thereafter this shall be the maximum that may be charged.

Mr. Chairman, it is a notorious fact that the cab companies overcharge the people of the District of Columbia and the city of Washington. Not only that, but the charges are irregular—higher to-morrow than they are to-day—and different for the same distance from time to time. I was talking this morning, Mr. Chairman, with one of my colleagues about this amendment that I proposed to offer, and he complained that they had charged him $1.90 to take him, alone, from the Union Station to his hotel—the Cairo. I went last night in one—and I want to say in passing that that has not inspired me to offer my amendment—and the charge against me was $1.60, although the distance was a little bit greater than that traveled by my colleague. Now, certainly these irregularities ought to be corrected; certainly the charges ought not only to be reasonable, but uniform.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I know personally that three different rates were charged for the same distance to one and the same gentleman.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Well, my friend from Kentucky cites other instances showing the irregularity of these charges.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with the rate of the charge. If the commissioners fix certain charges and certain rates and they charge different rates, they have violated the provision of the regulation, and the same with the different cases cited by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. The provision should be that the same charge shall be made.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly.

Mr. LANGLEY. It provides the charges for certain distances. It shows that something is wrong that ought to be corrected, which I take is the object of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MANN. It can not be corrected by this.

Mr. LANGLEY. As I understand him, it can.

Mr. MANN. Well, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing the extension of and maintaining the high-service system of water distribution, laying necessary service and trunk mains for low service, including a 12-inch main to afford fire protection to the National Training School for Boys, and purchasing, installing, and maintaining water meters on services to such private residences and to such business places as may not be required to install meters under existing regulations as may be directed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, said meters at all times to remain the property of the District of Columbia, to include all necessary land, machinery, buildings, mains, and appurtenances, and labor, and the purchase and maintenance of horses, wagons, carts, and harness necessary for the proper execution of this work, so much as may be available in the water fund during the fiscal year 1910, after providing for the expenditures hereinbefore authorized, is hereby appropriated.

Mr. MANN. I move to strike out the last word. May I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what he means by "high-service system of water distribution?"

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the service to the high grounds about the District of Columbia. For instance, the high-pressure service would have its source at Fort Reno, that being the highest point from which water can be brought into the city.

Mr. MANN. It does not refer to the higher-pressure system, does it?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not as ordinarily understood by that term for the extinguishment of fire. I may say that it has been urged upon the committee for years, but we have not yet felt that we ought to recommend it to the House.

Mr. MANN. What is the distinction in the District between the high-service systems and the low-service system?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the city proper, within what is known as "the old boundary"—Florida avenue—is supplied by the low-pressure system; and the high lands, Columbia Heights and others, by the high-pressure system.

Mr. MANN. Then, apparently, according to the gentleman's report, he carries in the bill an appropriation for a high-service system and for—laying necessary service and trunk mains for low service, including a 12-inch main to afford fire protection to the new National Training School for boys, and purchasing, installing, and maintaining water meters—

Yet he says—

under an indefinite appropriation there has been expended to July 1, 1908, for extending high-service water distribution, about $3,700,000—which is all the money which has been expended for either system. Now, is all the money expended on the hills, or is that an inadvertent mistake?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. All the money has certainly not been expended on the hills. The expenditure here for this main to the National Training School is right in line with the statement recently made.

Mr. MANN. That is the low service?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The high service, bringing the water from one high point in the District.

Mr. MANN. But here you included the low service, apparently. However, that may be a matter of construction.

Now, I notice that the gentleman says in his report, and apparently in the bill, and certainly in the press the statement has been made, that the amount recommended for the water department is $123,160, being a reduction of $2,000 in the appropriation for the water department below the current fiscal year. It seems to me that we appropriate a very much larger sum than that for the water department.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think you will find that in the report.

Mr. MANN. I just read from the report that you appropriate $123,160, when in fact you appropriate every dollar of revenue from the water department.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If you will allow me to read from the report:

It is estimated that the water revenues available for the fiscal year 1910 will amount to $555,000, but it is provided in the accompanying bill, as it was in the acts for the current and seventeen preceding fiscal years, that any surplus of these revenues over the appropriations made specifically therefrom shall be applied to the work of extending the high-service system of water distribution. Under these indefinite appropriations of the surplus water revenues there has been expended to July 1, 1908, for extending the high-service system of water distribution about $3,700,000. The estimated ultimate cost is about $5,600,000, which sum includes $1,200,000 estimated to be required to complete installation of meters in private premises.

Now, the provision for a national training school is in line with that provision.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the provision for low service is not in the bill, although made up out of the same sum. However, I only asked for information. After reading the report I could not understand it until I heard the gentleman's explanation. Now, they appropriated for the low-service system and then said it was all expended on the high-service system.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We only specifically appropriate for the operation, but indefinitely for the extension.

Mr. MANN. As a matter of fact, you do not reduce the appropriation for the water system at all. You appropriate every dollar of the revenue. You appropriate specifically $2,000 less than you appropriated specifically before, and then you appropriate all the balance for much the same purpose. It is the difference between tweedledum and tweedledee whether you appropriated it specifically or not, so it is no reduction. That is what I want to ascertain. There is no reduction in the amount appropriated for the water system and can not be, I take it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Let me say to my friend that the law dedicates these revenues to this service exclusively, and it is only a question whether that shall be mentioned at all in the appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the general law may do, but the District appropriation bill specifically provides—

So much as may be available in the water fund during the fiscal year 1910, after providing for the expenditures hereinbefore authorized, is hereby appropriated—

For these various purposes. It is just as much an appropriation as though you had mentioned the sum.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We felt that was due to the House for its information.

Mr. MANN. It misled the House. That is the reason I called attention to it.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the pending amendments, and with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OLMSTED, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 25392, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and pending amendments to the final passage.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the playgrounds amendment, $15,000.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the vote will be taken upon the amendments, with that exception, in gross.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 34, lines 13 and 14, by striking out the words "fifteen hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof "fifteen thousand."

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that he was in doubt, and on a division there were 51 ayes and 49 noes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 97, nays 134, answered "present" 7, not voting 149, as follows:

Mr. AMES. Mr. Speaker, I should like to be recorded as "present," instead of voting "aye," as I am paired.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. AMES, and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARDNER of Michigan, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

EULOGIES.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE ORDER NO. 13.

Ordered, That there be a session of the House at 12 m., Sunday, February 21, for the delivery of eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. ARIOSTO A. WILEY, late a Member of this House from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the order.

The order was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolutions, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 68.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for a project of straightening of the Big Sioux River, in the State of South Dakota, and report same to the Congress.

Senate concurrent resolution 65.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for deepening the channel and the entrance to same of Warroad Harbor, Minnesota, and protecting the channel and entrance to the same by means of a dike or otherwise.

Senate concurrent resolution 64.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be made a resurvey of Oakland Harbor, Alameda County, Cal., with a view of improving the same to meet the present and future demands of commerce, and to submit estimates of cost of the following three projects: Project No. 1, a channel 700 to 800 feet wide and 20 feet deep from San Francisco Bay to the foot of Tenth avenue extended, thence around Brooklyn Basin, 500 to 700 feet wide and 25 feet deep at low tide; project No. 2, same as project No. 1, except that depth be 34 at low tide; project No. 3, same as projects Nos. 1 and 2, except that the whole of Brooklyn Basin be dredged to pierhead line at a uniform depth of 25 or 34 feet at low tide.

Senate concurrent resolution 63.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the bar of San Francisco Bay, in the State of California, to confirm the depths shown on the charts of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and to cause estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the North, or Bonita, channel by the removal of Centissima and Sears rocks, and report the same to Congress.

Senate concurrent resolution 61.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for a project of improvement of Lake Traverse, in the State of South Dakota and county of Roberts, and report same to the Congress.

Senate concurrent resolution 60.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of the shoal or bar at the entrance to Chincoteague Bay, with a view to the removal of said shoal or bar, and providing for a channel depth of 15 feet at that point, and to submit estimates for such improvement.

Senate concurrent resolution 57.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 10th day of February, 1909, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 14343. An act to correct the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell;

H. R. 8615. An act to correct the naval record of Edward T. Lincoln;

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 21957) relating to affairs in the Territories disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BEVERIDGE, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. R. 106. Joint resolution authorizing the granting of permits to the committee on inaugural ceremonies on the occasion of the inauguration of the President-elect on March 4, 1909, etc.—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 23866. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906.

CLARENCE FREDERICK CHAPMAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 12499) for the relief of Clarence Frederick Chapman, of the United States Navy, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. BUTLER, Mr. ROBERTS, and Mr. GREGG.

STEAMSHIP "TABASQUENO."

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 23351) for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SEACOAST FORTIFICATIONS, SAN PEDRO, CAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States (S. Doc. No. 656), which was read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In compliance with the following paragraph in the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1908,

"The Secretary of War is directed, by a suitable board, to investigate and report fully to Congress as to the advisability and necessity of seacoast fortifications for the protection of the harbor of San Pedro, Cal., and the cities in that vicinity, and if such fortifications are deemed advisable or necessary to furnish an estimate of the cost of sites and fortifications separately,"

I transmit the accompanying communication from the Secretary of War, submitting the information called for.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1909.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION, TOKYO, JAPAN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following messages from the President of the United States (S. Docs. Nos. 657 and 658), which were read and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Secretary of State covering one from the commissioners-general of the United States to the Tokyo Exposition of 1912, made in pursuance of the requirements of section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 22, 1908, providing for "the participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1909.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In pursuance of the requirement of section 2 of the act of Congress approved May 22, 1908, providing "for the participation by the United States in an international exposition to be held at Tokyo, Japan, in 1912," I transmit herewith a copy of a detailed statement of expenditures made to December 31, 1908, by the commissioners-general appointed under the act.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 14, 1909.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. RANDELL of Texas was granted leave of absence indefinitely on account of important business.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE—SECRET SERVICE.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana, from the Committee on Printing, reports the concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 52.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives 2,000,000 copies of the debate and proceedings in the House of Representatives Friday, January 8, 1909, concerning that portion of the annual message of the President relating to the Secret Service, to be delivered through the folding room, excepting 2,000, which shall be assigned to the document room.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I make the point of order that this resolution is not privileged, for the reason that it does not cover matters of printing for the use of the House or the two Houses. The very number of copies, 2,000,000, shows that it is for no such use, although stated to the contrary in the resolution. I make the further point of order that it is not permissible, by concurrent resolution, to amend a statute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman as to the points of order.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, touching my first point of order, I read from the rule which gives privilege to reports from the Committee on Printing:

> The following-named committee shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated. * * * The Committee on Printing on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this concurrent resolution refers to printing of 2,000,000 copies of a certain debate. To be sure, the resolution states that the documents are for the use of the House of Representatives, but it is beyond reasonable supposition to infer that 2,000,000 copies can be used by the House of Representatives. Touching my second point of order, I read from the statutes, page 617, volume 28, United States Statutes at Large—

> The Public Printer shall furnish the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as follows, and shall furnish gratuitously no others in addition thereto.

Then follows the number of copies which may be furnished free for the use of the House of Representatives. This is an endeavor to amend a statute, not by a bill or a joint resolution, but by a concurrent resolution, which does not require the consent of the Executive.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman permit a question? Does the gentleman understand this is to furnish copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for free distribution?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, am I at liberty to answer the gentleman's question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated that he would hear the gentleman on his point of order, and the Chair will be very glad to hear from the gentleman further by answering a question or otherwise.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it is my opinion that this is a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If the gentleman makes an address in this House, under the statute no copies of that address can be distributed gratuitously. The gentleman must pay for the printing of his own speech, and the same principle should obtain with respect to the printing of the matter herein proposed.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, my opinion would be that this would be nothing more or less than a congressional document, which would not be printed in the form of the RECORD, as we get it daily, but would be issued in such a way as to reduce the expense below the price of the RECORD some eight or ten thousand dollars. If printed in the form of the RECORD, the cost of envelopes would be very great. I think, under the rule, that a measure to have printing done for the use of the House is clearly privileged.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] yield to a question?

Mr. LANDIS. I will.

Mr. MANN. What is the law now as to the limitation of the cost of the printing reported from the Committee on Printing?

Mr. LANDIS. For the use of the House?

Mr. MANN. For the use of the House.

Mr. LANDIS. By simple resolution we can provide for printing the cost of which does not exceed $500.

Mr. MANN. Of course the cost of this would exceed $500?

Mr. LANDIS. The cost of this, as estimated by the Public Printer, is $68,633.

Mr. MANN. Sixty-eight thousand dollars?

Mr. LANDIS. Sixty-eight thousand dollars.

Mr. MANN. How much additional cost would there be if the President's two messages were printed in connection with this printing?

Mr. LANDIS. The additional cost would not be great. I will say that this cost as figured did not contemplate the printing of the President's message.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman at all computed——

Mr. LANDIS. And I would say to the gentleman that this estimate contemplated the circulation of the matter in the shape of a document, and not as the RECORD is now printed. Should it be printed according to the form of the RECORD proper, the expense would be some eight thousand or ten thousand dollars greater on account of the envelopes.

Mr. MANN. As I take it, this expense is for the composing, the press work, and paper, and the envelopes that they are to go in?

Mr. LANDIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It does not contemplate the cost that it will be to the Government of distributing these 2,000,000 copies throughout the length and breadth of the land?

Mr. LANDIS. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Through the Post-Office Department?

Mr. LANDIS. That is a question for the Post-Office Department.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman an idea of what that would cost at the rate of 8 cents a pound, which the Government says it will cost to distribute such matter?

Mr. LANDIS. I would respectfully refer that to the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MANN. Of course that would depend on the weight of the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to hear the gentleman on the question of order if the gentleman has anything to submit on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. LANDIS. I yield such time as the gentleman may require.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not yield.

Mr. LANDIS. I have nothing further to offer, Mr. Speaker, on the question of order.

The SPEAKER. The question of order is in the discretion of the Chair. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desire to be heard on the question of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I supposed that the Speaker was looking up the law and precedents while we were entertaining the House. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Rule XI makes this report privileged. In the concurrent resolution submitted it purports to be for the use of the House. That settles the question in the opinion of the Chair as to the first point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] makes.

Paragraph 4 of the act approved March 1, 1907, reads:

> Orders for printing extra copies otherwise than herein provided for shall be by simple, concurrent, or joint resolution. Either House may print extra copies to the amount of $500 by simple resolution; if the cost exceeds that sum, the printing shall be ordered by concurrent resolution except when the resolution is self-appropriating—

And so forth.

Now, the gentleman's second point of order, it seems to the Chair, is not well taken, for the reason that to sustain the point of order the Chair would have to determine that the 2,000,000 copies were not for the use of the House. If the Chair had that authority, to put an extreme case, the Chair might hold that the printing of 2 or 2,000 copies, or any other number, was not for the use of the House. It is a question of privilege under the points of order that the Chair passes upon, and, in the opinion of the Chair, it is a matter as to the propriety on the merits of the resolution for the House to pass upon. Therefore the Chair overrules the points of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] has the floor.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I should state in presenting this report that the cost of this printing will be, as estimated by the Government Printing Office, $68,633, I believe—the figures are found with the report. That contemplates the printing in such form as to circulate the publication in the envelopes in which speeches of Members of Congress are usually circulated. It does not contemplate printing the RECORD in the shape that we get it daily. In such form the expense would be from $8,000 to $10,000 more, if the full issue were printed, on account of the additional cost of the envelopes. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LANDIS. I will.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for the purpose of offering an amendment?

Mr. LANDIS. I do not.

The SPEAKER. Then, in that event, the amendment will not be in order.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman now to yield to me for the purpose of having read for the information of the House an amendment which I propose to offer at the proper time, and which I think the House should have notice of before the debate proceeds.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for that purpose?

Mr. LANDIS. I do.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. A point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields to the gentleman from Kentucky sufficient time to read the following proposed amendment as part of his remarks.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I am asking for recognition for a point of order which should come in at this present moment, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Upon the reading of the proposed amendment?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Upon the fact that the gentleman from Indiana said, "I reserve the balance of my time" and sat down, thereby yielding the floor to the gentleman from Michigan, who took it in his own right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan to ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield to him for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That was my purpose, although I did not state it in my request. I asked him to yield, and he said he did, and I offered the amendment, and then the gentleman said, "I do not yield for that purpose."

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the gentleman from Indiana did not have the floor to yield for any purpose, having reserved his time and sat down.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this point is not well taken, because the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] asked if the gentleman from Indiana would yield him time——

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Indiana yielded.

Mr. LANDIS. And having time to yield, I said to him I would.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana knows, of course, what his intention was.

Mr. LANDIS. I did not yield to the gentleman from Michigan for the purpose of offering an amendment, as I had previously agreed with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] that I would yield to him for the purpose of having a proposed amendment read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Massachusetts. To whom does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. LANDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] for the purpose of having read to the House for information a proposed amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have already sent the amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. How long does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANDIS. Five minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. I have already sent the proposed amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, as part of his remarks, asks to have read for information the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

The message of the President dated January 4, 1909, upon the same subject, to be printed as an appendix thereto.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to speak now upon the proposed amendment nor upon the resolution. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to yield only for the reading of my amendment. That was my request. At the proper time, if opportunity is given to offer my amendment, as I expect, I will address the House on it then.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I give notice that if that amendment is offered I shall make the point of order that there is no such message, the House having refused to receive the same.

The SPEAKER. No amendment has been offered. It has been read for information.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution, if no one cares to speak on it.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield to me five minutes?

Mr. LANDIS. I will.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should like to ask the gentleman to withhold the previous question until we can discuss this matter.

Mr. LANDIS. I will reserve that motion, if the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do desire to be heard.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANDIS. How much time does the gentleman from Michigan desire?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Ten minutes.

Mr. LANDIS. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I come in next, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I am very much opposed to the adoption of this resolution. It seems to me that it has no precedent and is unwarranted. I do not believe that the House is justified in adopting a resolution providing for an expenditure of over $68,000 in order that there may be circulated among the people of the United States speeches, the like of which heretofore have been paid for by individual Members. Furthermore, it seems to me that it is entirely unjust and unbecoming of the American Congress to publish part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which refers to a subject that is not set out in detail, which is not shown in connection with the RECORD proposed to be published, as forming the basis upon which that discussion is founded. All of the debate and all of the proceedings of that day were upon two messages sent by the President to Congress, one the annual message of last December, as a result of which the Congress appointed a committee for the purpose of determining what the President meant by it.

The other was a message in answer to the request of that committee that the President file a bill of particulars, and on these messages occurred the debate and proceedings which this resolution proposes to have published. Do gentlemen think it is fair to publish in this unusual way ex parte discussions?

Now, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there was a wide difference of opinion among the Members of the House as to what the President really said, some of them insisting that he had explained the whole matter to the Congress, and inasmuch, further, as the whole object of those responsible for this resolution is to set forth that side of the question which they have advocated, it seems to me clear that Members can do nothing less than to provide for printing with these proceedings as an appendix the message of the President of January 4 on this subject, in order that the country may know for itself just exactly what the President did say on this subject.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not care to criticise gentlemen of this House, but I submit that they have heard from the country sufficiently now to know that they can not afford to be anything but fair at least in the discussion of this great question, which has been submitted to the House and through it to the country. So, Mr. Speaker, I think this House can not afford to take the position of authorizing the expenditure of $68,000 for the purpose of circulating among their constituents the speeches of gentlemen who ought to pay the price themselves. The House has already gone too far in this regrettable matter. Let us not do this unwarranted, unwise, and unfair thing. Anyway, let us be decent enough to publish both sides in full if anything is to be published.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does not the gentleman think it would be a very unwise precedent on the part of this House to print the speeches of any Member of this House at government expense?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Can the gentleman cite the House to any precedent where heretofore the speeches of individual Members have been printed at the expense of the Government for circulation throughout the country?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I can not. I said so in the beginning of my remarks. So, Mr. Speaker, without desiring to take the time of the House, and regretting that it has been necessary to bring this resolution before us, I trust that in decency to itself, in respect for its standing as the greatest deliberative body in the world, the House will not adopt this resolution.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER].

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution. I can see no good purpose in our spending nearly $70,000 for printing 2,000,000 copies of the proceedings of the House last Friday. If we had to pay postage on copies of this publication, it would cost at least $20,000 to distribute it. The gross expense, therefore, of printing and distributing the document would be about $90,000.

First of all, we are establishing a bad precedent. We have the daily record of our proceedings here. We have embalmed in that record the proceedings of the House on Friday last. I have been here eight years, and during that time we have had many long and able debates upon public questions of great and far-reaching interest; but never before, that I recall, have we undertaken to give to the public the details of a debate by any such course as this resolution proposes. If we adopt this resolution, we may fairly expect whenever hereafter any important debate occurs, to be called upon to provide for the printing and distribution at the public expense of the record of the debate.

And why should we establish this expensive precedent at this time? Is there any general call from the American people for a chance to read the details of the debate in question? Why, not at all. The debate was not hid under a bushel. Did not the press give it fully to the American people? If a Member of Congress is called upon by a constituent for a copy of his speech or a copy of the speech of his colleagues on the occasion in question, he can very easily supply him with either. Why, then, should we at this time, when we are hearing so much about the need of economy add this useless burden to the National Treasury? It seems to me that we would present a beautiful spectacle if, after having this very day refused to let the people of Washington spend $15,000 of their own money to equip and maintain playgrounds for the school children, we should proceed to exploit ourselves before the American people by spending $90,000 in printing and distributing our own speeches.

Then, too, let us make no mistake. The American people are not sitting up nights for an opportunity to read the details of that debate. I was unavoidably absent last Friday. But I have carefully read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that day, and what I say is no reflection upon the quality of the speeches. But the incident is a closed one, and if the American people are content to let it remain closed we also ought to be willing to do so. In my humble opinion, therefore, the adoption of this resolution would establish an unwise precedent, would put the Government to large and foolish expense, would serve no good purpose, and would subject us to much just criticism.

And so, Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the resolution and must vote against it.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I talked about this resolution the other day with the gentleman who has now reported it into the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS]. I think I violate no confidence when I say that his personal judgment was opposed to the passage of the resolution, but that as chairman of the Committee on Printing he felt it his duty to present the proposition to the House.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me a somewhat remarkable proposition that we should be asked at this time to print 2,000,000 copies of one side of a question and distribute them at the public expense. I do not condone the unfortunate incident, the seeming attack by the President upon Congress, but I see no occasion for the House, after having met that proposition in a respectable and orderly manner, to continue it as a dispute and quarrel with the President.

I appreciate the attitude of men who were attacked and who have made speeches. Doubtless their speeches may well and properly be read in their districts and elsewhere throughout the United States. It is sometimes an expensive matter to make a speech in this House. I made a speech on the pure-food bill in the House which cost me about $1,000 at the Printing Office to distribute in answer to requests. That is one of the unfortunate incidents of the fame which comes sometimes to the man who makes a speech. But I see no occasion for spending $70,000 now for the publication of these speeches and at least $80,000 more expense to the Post-Office Department in distributing these speeches.

We have maintained a dignified attitude up to this time in this controversy with the President. I wish it might be properly said that both sides had maintained a dignified attitude. [Applause.] Let us, at least, maintain the dignity of our position without engaging in an attempt to publish to the people one side of the controversy. [Applause.]

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, the amendment I had read for the information of the House, and which I propose to offer, should, I think, in all justice and fairness to our President, be adopted if the resolution is adopted. I am, however, opposed to the entire proposition. I think the country has had at least enough of this whole controversy, and I suspect that the people are growing weary of it. I think also that too much money and time have been expended already in the discussion of it. One reason why I want the President's message printed along with the report of the proceedings, if the resolution is adopted, is that the resolution adopted by the House last Friday stated that his message was "unresponsive" to the resolution of the House in answer to which the message was sent.

I thought that was not a correct statement, and that was one of the grounds upon which I voted against the resolution; and I want the people of my district to read the President's entire message, in connection with the proceedings of the House, and all that was said, so that they may decide upon all of the facts together whether my position was correct or not. [Applause.] Of course I had other reasons for voting against the resolution, which I tried, but failed, to get in the RECORD the other day. I suppose they would not be germane to the question now before the House, and I will not attempt to state them. Surely, gentlemen desire to be just to the President, and I submit that it would be unjust to him to send out in a printed document, taken from their logical connection in his message, those portions of the message only to which objection was raised. Let us print all the facts or none. But, as has already been stated, the people understand this whole matter sufficiently now and do not need any more light on it. I hope the resolution will be defeated.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I had read for the information of the House, if it is not already before the House as having been offered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do that until he obtains the floor or until the floor is conceded to him under such conditions that he could offer the amendment.

Mr. LANGLEY. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to offer the amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. LANDIS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order, for the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of this estimate, to move to postpone the consideration of the resolution until to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Indiana will yield for that purpose, it would be in order.

Mr. LANDIS. The gentleman from Indiana will not yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Then, until the gentleman from Indiana yields the floor for that purpose, the gentleman could not make the motion.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, there is one reason which seems to me potent why this resolution ought not to be adopted, and that is this: That after five hours were consumed by the proponents of these resolutions in advocating them to the House, one of the gentlemen who had been the advocate of the resolutions, moved the previous question, and debate was absolutely cut off by a vote of the House, so that those of us who desired to speak against the resolutions had no opportunity to do so. Therefore I do not think it would be fair to anyone concerned, including the President, to have published six hours of argument in favor of these resolutions when these gentlemen themselves cut off argument against the resolutions. Especially is this true, in view of the fact that we had joined in unanimous consent that these gentlemen, named in the message, might all speak in order, upon the positive assurance of the chairman of the special committee that no attempt would be made to limit debate. I hope the resolution will not pass.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I take it that no man in this House more strenuously reprobated the language of the President of the United States when, under the guise of his constitutional right to send messages to the House, he assumed the schoolmaster attitude of scolding the House as if we were composed of little children, and when, furthermore, he added to that an offensive and unnecessarily insulting tone to convey statements that, in the opinion of the House and, as I believe, in the opinion of the country are not true. Mr. Speaker, having said that much, I want to say that I am opposed to the passage of this resolution. I believe in fair fighting. We knew when we took up the gauntlet that the President threw down that he could get the ear of the country for a message and that we could not get as fully the ear of the country for individual speeches made in opposition.

That situation was as patent to us then as it is now. We defended our honor. We refused to receive from the President of the United States a schoolmaster rebuke of us, and we refused to receive a message which, in our opinion, stated things as facts that were, in our opinion, not facts, and which assumed an offensive and insulting attitude toward the House. We occupy a constitutional position, and he another. It does not seem to me that it would be "fair fighting" by our own authority to give ourselves additional weapons to those with which we entered upon the fight. In addition to that, I think that gentlemen are underestimating the common sense of the American people when they take for granted that the American people do not understand, and will not understand, the real issue between the President and the House. That real issue was simply a denial on the part of the House of the proposition that anybody, anywhere, had a right to insult the House, whether it be the President of the United States or anybody else, whether in the guise of a message, or any other communication. It was simply a measure that any gentleman takes when somebody sends him an offensive letter, a right either to throw it into the wastebasket or to send it back after being opened. What we did with the President was broadly to send back to him what he had said, because it was insulting and offensive and, in our opinion as a body, was, moreover, untrue.

I am not willing that the dignified action that the House took within the scope of its constitutional prerogatives shall have as an unnecessary supplement to it an attempt upon its part to go outside of the regular routine in order to put itself before the country with a degree of strength that the ordinary routine would not carry with it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does not the gentleman think that when one gentleman assures another gentleman of his perfect lack of any intention to insult, that that gentleman ought to accept his word for it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the gentleman, I will say that if I wrote him a note accusing him of being the subject of corrupt influences or of being "actuated by corrupt influences," and he wrote back to me and said "Your note is offensive," and then after that I said to him in another note, "I did not mean to be offensive, but, all the same, you have been actuated by corrupt influences," I would say that the gentleman had apologized in words, while he had added insult to injury in fact. That is what the President did.

He covertly repeated his insult, and with devilish ingenuity concealed its covertness.

When a man calls me a liar and then writes me he "did not mean to be offensive," and then goes on and tries to prove I am a liar, I see no apology in the response. [Applause.] The supplemental message of the President was neither an apology nor an explanation of the offense to the House——

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to the resolution under consideration.

Several MEMBERS. He has finished.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With this addition: We are not only an equal and coordinate branch of this Government, but a separate branch, and armed by the Constitution with the right to sit in judgment on our own conduct, responsible to nobody but the people—our constituents.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me?

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I believe the passage of this resolution would be unwise. [Applause.] I know that the personal opinion of the chairman of the Committee on Printing was that it was unwise. The only possible excuse for this printing, in my judgment, is this, that owing to the volume of the proceedings of that day they did not receive that full treatment by the press that was necessarily given to the President's messages, and so the country received a full statement of the President's position and only a partial statement of the position of the House. I for one am willing to go to my constituents upon my record in this House unaided by an appropriation from the Federal Treasury. [Applause.] Well knowing that the convictions of the gentleman from Indiana have all the time been against this action, I now ask him to yield to me to move to lay this resolution on the table.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken, and the motion to lay on the table was agreed to. [Applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

FRIDAY, January 15, 1909.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SCOTT, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

REMOVAL OF SNOW AND ICE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, requesting that an appropriation of $10,000 be made for removing snow, ice, and slush from the route of the inaugural procession, etc. (H. Doc. No. 1347), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF FLORIDA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, an authenticated copy of the certification of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Florida, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to be filed.

REPORT OF CHESAPEAKE AND POTOMAC TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the annual report of the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company for the year ended December 31, 1908 (H. Doc. No. 1321), which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. Browning, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 23351) for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12490) for the relief of Clarence Frederick Chapman, of the United States Navy; asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and had apointed Mr. BUTLER, Mr. ROBERTS, and Mr. GREGG managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 22884. An act to impose a tax upon alcoholic compounds coming from Porto Rico, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 25392. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 23866) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

MINNESOTA AND MANITOBA RAILROAD.

Mr. CLAPP. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 7639) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise certain lands in the State of Minnesota for the purpose of granting the same to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company for a ballast pit, to report it favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I submit a report (No. 770) thereon. This is a local bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The committee reports to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be appraised the south half of the southwest quarter of section 4, township 161 north, range 34 west of the 5th meridian of the Red Lake Indian Reservation in the State of Minnesota, for the purpose of granting the same to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company for a ballast pit for ballasting its line of railway in the State of Minnesota, and upon appraising said land the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to convey the same to said railroad company upon such terms as he may deem advisable: Provided, That he shall not convey said land to said railroad company until Hans M. Carlson, who has heretofore made homestead entry thereon, shall relinquish such homestead entry and claim to the land herein described, which relinquishment the said Hans M. Carlson is authorized to make without prejudice to his rights as homesteader; and upon the filing of such relinquishment said land shall be withheld from public entry for the space of six months within which to complete the negotiation for the same provided for by this act.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

J. RANDOLPH PEYTON.

Mr. SCOTT. I report back from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments the bill (S. 7764) for the relief of J. Randolph Peyton, and I submit a report (No. 769) thereon. I ask unanimous consent to have the bill considered at this time.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, in line 5, after the word "Peyton," to insert the word "late;" in line 7, after the word "lieutenant," to insert the words "of infantry;" and in line 8, after the word "lieutenant," to insert the words "of infantry," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint J. Randolph Peyton, late a cadet at the Military Academy at West Point, to the position of second lieutenant of infantry in the army, and to place him upon the retired list with the pay of a retired second lieutenant of infantry.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IDAHO JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I ask leave to withdraw the bill (S. 8446) to create an additional division in the judicial district of the State of Idaho, which was introduced by me on the 13th instant and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Section 8 was striken out, but through inadvertence in the clerical preparation of the bill it was left in. I desire to withdraw the bill for the purpose of striking out section 8 and then have it reprinted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 22884. An act to impose a tax upon alcoholic compounds coming from Porto Rico, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 25392. An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. Latta, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on January 9, 1909, approved and signed the following act:

S. 5207. An act for the relief of William Radcliffe.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Wednesday next, the 20th instant, immediately after the conclusion of the morning business, I shall submit some remarks on the bills pending to restore certain enlisted men to the army, growing out of the Brownsville affray.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at half past 1 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill 23464, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 23464) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the formal reading of the bill may be omitted, and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Legislative," in the item of appropriation for the Senate, on page 2, line 14, before the word "dollars," to insert "two hundred," so as to read:

Chaplain: For Chaplain of the Senate, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the items for the office of the Secretary of the Senate, on page 2, line 16, after the word "officer," to insert "of salaries of Senators and;" in line 17, after the word "Senate," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "six thousand five hundred;" and in line 18, after the word "dollars," to strike out "and for compensation as disbursing officer of salaries of Senators, $396; hire of horse and wagon for the Secretary's office, $700," so as to read:

Office of Secretary: For Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer of salaries of Senators and of the contingent fund of the Senate, $6,500, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. The report which accompanied the bill shows the amount of the bill as passed by the House to be $31,662,760, and the net increase recommended by the Senate committee amounts to the usually large sum of $727,974. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming, who has charge of the bill, to state briefly (and I think he can state it somewhat more briefly than the report does) the principal items of increase.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, answering the Senator from Texas, I will say that one large item is the transfer of something like $130,000 from what has been heretofore paid from the contingent fund of the Senate for clerks to different committees, stenographers, clerks, messengers, and so forth, usually provided for in deficiency bills. We have increased the salary of the President of the United States $50,000, but the amendment cuts off $25,000 which would appear in another bill—the sundry civil appropriation bill. So in that item the real addition is but $25,000 to the expenses of the Government, and yet it appears in this bill as an increase of $50,000. Then comes the increase in the salaries of the Supreme Court, Court of Claims, circuit court of appeals, and district court judges of the United States, also the supreme court and court of appeals judges of the District of Columbia. Those make up the larger items of the net increase.

Mr. CULBERSON. My attention was distracted for a moment by a card having been sent in. Will the Senator state the aggregate increase for the judiciary? I have heard $450,000 a year estimated as the proposed increase of judicial salaries. I will ask the Senator if that is in the neighborhood of being correct?

Mr. WARREN. Without stopping to figure it, I think it might be in that neighborhood.

Mr. CLAY. I have the figures here.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is three hundred and twenty-eight thousand and some hundred dollars.

Mr. WARREN. I am corrected by my colleague on the committee, who says it is three hundred and twenty-eight thousand and some odd hundred dollars.

Mr. CLAY. It is $328,500.

Mr. CULBERSON. For judicial salaries alone?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. I have here a statement showing the present salaries and the proposed increase.

Mr. WARREN. As the Senator's attention was distracted, I wish to say again that $134,320 of this sum is not a new draft upon the Treasury; it is simply a transfer from what would appear in another bill if not included here, and the same is true as to $25,000 of the additional compensation to the President. We have heretofore allowed in the sundry civil appropriation bill, I think, $25,000 a year to the President for traveling expenses. That is provided for here, and it will not be included in the sundry civil bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment was, on page 3, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for maintenance of the office of the Secretary of the Senate from $78,976 to $79,380.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item of appropriation for clerks and messengers to committees of the Senate, on page 4, line 12, to increase the salary of the assistant clerk to the Committee on Appropriations from $2,220 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 17, to increase the salary of the clerk to the Committee on Claims from $2,220 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 20, to increase the salary of the clerk to the Committee on Commerce from $2,220 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 23, to increase the salary of the clerk to the Committee on Pensions from $2,220 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 3, to increase the salary of the Clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary from $2,220 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 6, to increase the salary of the clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs from $2,220 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 7, to increase the salary of the assistant clerk to the Committee on Military Affairs from $2,000 to $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 9, to increase the salary of the clerk to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads from $2,220 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 12, to increase the salary of the clerk to the Committee on the District of Columbia from $2,220 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert: "Clerks to the Committees on Naval Affairs, Indian Affairs, Agriculture and Forestry, Public Buildings and Grounds, and Interstate Commerce, at $2,500 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 24, before the word "Census," to strike out "Naval Affairs;" in the same line, after the word "Lands," to strike out "Indian Affairs;" on page 6, line 1, after the word "Senate," to strike out "Public Buildings and Grounds, Agriculture and Forestry;" and in line 2, after the word "Territories," to strike out "Interstate Commerce;" so as to read:

Clerks to the Committees on Census, Public Lands, to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Education and Labor, Territories, Public Health and National Quarantine—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KEAN. I understand that the committee amendments are now being considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They are now being considered under the order of the Senate.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 17, to increase the salaries of the clerks to the Committees on Woman Suffrage and Mines and Mining from $2,100 each to $2,220 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 19, to increase the total appropriation for the salaries of clerks and messengers to committees of the Senate from $138,820 to $142,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 20, to insert:

For additional amount for the clerk to the Committee on Rules for revising and preparing for publication biennially, under the direction of the committee, the Senate Manual, $1,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 3, before the word "dollars," to strike out "one thousand eight hundred dollars each, thirty-nine thousand six hundred," and insert "two thousand two hundred and twenty dollars each, forty-eight thousand eight hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

For 22 clerks to committee, at $2,220 each, $48,840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 3, to insert:

For the following now authorized by Senate resolutions and paid from the appropriations for miscellaneous items, contingent expenses of the Senate, namely: For assistant clerk to Committee on Appropriations, $2,500; assistant clerk to Committee on Foreign Relations, $2,220; assistant clerks to the Committees on Philippines, Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, Judiciary, Interstate Commerce, Pensions, Private Land Claims, District of Columbia, Rules, and conference minority of the Senate, at $1,800 each; three assistant clerks to Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, assistant clerks to Committees on Appropriations, Territories, Indian Affairs, Naval Affairs, Immigration, Printing, Public Buildings and Grounds, Claims, Coast Defenses, Enrolled Bills, Manufactures, Military Affairs, Education and Labor, Agriculture and Forestry, Cuban Relations, Privileges and Elections, Public Lands, Interoceanic Canals, and Public Health and National Quarantine, at $1,440 each; messengers to committees on Joint Committee on the Library, Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Privileges and Elections, Philippines, Immigration, Printing, Expenditures in the Department of State, Coast and Insular Survey, Mines and Mining, Railroads, Revision of the Laws of the United States, Territories, Agriculture and Forestry, Irrigation, Patents, Pacific Railroads, Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, Geological Survey, Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, Commerce, Census, Interstate Commerce, Forest Reservations and Protection of Game, Indian Depredations, University of the United States, Standards, Weights, and Measures, Industrial Expositions, Five Civilized Tribes of Indians, Revolutionary Claims, Investigate Trespassers on Indian Lands, National Banks, Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress, Civil Service and Retrenchment, Mississippi River and its Tributaries, Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service, Fisheries, Canadian Relations, Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia, Investigate the Condition of Potomac River Front at Washington, Disposition of Useless Documents in Executive Departments, Woman Suffrage, Transportation and Sale of Meat Products, Public Buildings and Grounds, Expenditures in the Treasury Department, Expenditures in the War Department, Expenditures in the Navy Department, Expenditures in the Interior Department, Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, Expenditures in the Department of Justice, and Rules, at $1,440 each; clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, compiling a history of revenue and general appropriation bills, at $2,500; two messengers, at $1,440 each; assistant librarian of the Senate, at $2,000; laborer, at $900; additional clerk in Senate Document Room, at $1,440; in all, $134,320.

Mr. FRYE. I call to the attention of the committee the fact that by a resolution of the Senate the assistant clerk of the Committee on Commerce receives $1,800, and in this amendment he is left at $1,440. It must be a mistake.

Mr. WARREN. If that is true, it is a mistake, because it was the intention to insert at the same amount as heretofore provided. I will say to the Senator that the intention was to follow the resolution, and it will be so corrected before we finish the consideration of the bill if a mistake has been made.

Mr. BURKETT. Before we leave this amendment, at the bottom of page 8 and the top of page 9 there is a provision for "compiling a history of revenue and general appropriation bills." Is that a new provision?

Mr. WARREN. It is not. It was formerly carried as all these matters that are in italics. They are existing clerkships, and some of them of many years' standing, but the salaries have been paid out of another fund. We seek in this bill to carry them into the general statutory provision year by year.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I should like to ask the Senator what is the object of employing that clerk and what he does?

Mr. WARREN. The Secretary of the Senate will inform the Senator about that, as he is a part of his corps.

Mr. BURKETT. If I could call the Secretary of the Senate here, I would be glad to get the information from him.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator will realize that the acting chairman of the subcommittee would hardly be able to state even what the different committee clerks are doing. But this clerk is one of the regular force of the Secretary of the Senate, who has this compilation to make from the files, documents, and so forth.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that I have not seen any such compilation as he refers to, and it seems to me the Senate has a right to know what the work is and something about it. I do not know of any place to ask for information, except from the committee having charge of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Perhaps I can enlighten the Senator far enough to say that the man's name is Durfee. He has been employed, I think, ever since I have been a Member of the Senate in compiling, and so forth, as stated here, and also in making compilations regarding tariff matters of our own and other countries. His time has been largely detailed to the Finance Committee when not employed in the secretary's office proper.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill. I caught the suggestion that we are changing the system by transferring the payment of these officers of the Senate from our contingent fund to the General Treasury. Is that the fact?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Does that make them subject to the civil service?

Mr. WARREN. The employees of the Senate are not subject to the civil service.

Mr. HEYBURN. They are not now, because they are paid out of a fund over which the Senate has control, but the question is whether or not this will be changed.

Mr. WARREN. I do not think they will be put under the civil service. Just as Senators' clerks and others here, they will be within the control of the Senate itself.

Mr. HEYBURN. Are you pretty sure of that?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. These are clerks in the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 10, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five thousand" and insert "six thousand five hundred;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "horse and wagon for his use, $420, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" in line 19, after the word "each," to strike out "messenger to official reporters' room, to be selected by the official reporters, $1,440" and insert "clerk on journal work for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to be selected by the official reporters, $2,000;" in line 25, after the word "dollars," to insert "cabinetmaker, $1,200;" on page 10, line 1, before the word "at," to strike out "four carpenters to assist him" and insert "three carpenters;" and in line 5, before the word "female," to strike out "two" and insert "three," so as to read:

Office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper: For Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, $6,500; for clerk to Sergeant-at-Arms, $2,000; assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; acting assistant doorkeeper, $2,592; 3 messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, at $1,800 each; 46 messengers, at $1,440 each; 2 messengers on the floor of the Senate, at $2,000 each; clerk on journal work for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, to be selected by the official reporters, $2,000; storekeeper, $1,800; upholsterer and locksmith, $1,440; cabinetmaker, $1,200; 3 carpenters, at $960 each; janitor, $1,200; 3 skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; 2 skilled laborers, at $900 each; laborer in charge of private passage, $840; 3 female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring room, at $720 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 7, after the word "each," to insert "chief telephone operator, $1,000."

Mr. WARREN. I wish to change that amendment and the one that follows by raising one and reducing the other. After the words "one thousand" I move to insert "two hundred."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 8, after the word "each," to insert "night telephone operator, $840."

Mr. WARREN. I move to strike out "$840" and to insert "$720."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 15, before the word "laborers," to strike out "twenty-eight" and insert "twenty-nine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate from $162,084 to $167,244.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that the Clerk may be directed to change this total, and also to change any total that may have to be changed in perfecting the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The next amendment was, on page 10, after line 20, to insert:

For police force for Senate Office Building under the Sergeant-at-Arms, namely: For 18 privates, at $1,050 each, $18,900.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 16, to insert:

To enable the Postmaster of the Senate to keep a constant supply of postage stamps for sale to Senators, $50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 2, to increase the appropriation for fuel, oil, and cotton waste, and advertising, for the heating and electrical apparatus from $25,000 to $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 10, after the word "labor," to strike out "and including purchase, driving, and care of carriage and horses for Vice-President," so as to make the clause read:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 12, to insert:

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building, $18,480.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, that is a very general item. I do not know under whose control it is. It is a new item altogether. It is rather large, and is a lump appropriation made in a very indefinite way.

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building, $18,480.

Can we not have some explanation of it?

Mr. WARREN. It is for the expenses of the Sergeant-at-Arms in supporting the Maltby Building, largely in the payment of employees of the building. It is a usual appropriation, but was left out by the House this year, probably through a misunderstanding. I have in my hand an amendment to offer at the end of the clause providing for its transfer to the new Senate Office Building when that is completed.

Mr. CULBERSON. But it is a new item?

Mr. WARREN. It is a new item as it appears in the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. It provides for the payment of the old roll, and is an entirely new item I take it.

Mr. WARREN. It appears here as a new item. Nevertheless, it is for contingent expenses that have been paid ever since we have used the Maltby Building.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I certainly misunderstood the item which has just been read. We can not refer to what happened in the committee room, but I thought that item had reference to repairs that were to be made on the Maltby Building, and I am sure that impression prevailed when it was adopted in general committee. I understood that the building had to be overhauled, that an estimate had been made in regard to expenses for overhauling it, and that this item was to be used for that purpose. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is partly right and partly wrong. The reason this clause appears here as a new item is that the other House constructs this bill in the first place, and that body probably forgot to include the item this year. Exactly the same provision was in the bill of last year. It does provide for repairs; but it also provides for all other expenses, for attendants, and for various things that are required for the use and comfort of those Senators who are roomed in the Maltby Building. I wish to offer the amendment to that clause which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let that item pass for the present?

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the proposed amendment to this item be first read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. In the proposed amendment on page 13, line 14, after the word "Building," it is proposed to insert "and Senate Office Building," so that, if amended, the clause will read:

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building and Senate Office Building, $18,480.

Mr. WARREN. Now, Mr. President, I read from the bill which was enacted last year, as follows:

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building, $18,480.

I think that is exactly the same as the item in the present bill. Then there is another item:

For repairs of Maltby Building, $2,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to, and the amendment as amended will be agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senator from Wyoming to allow that item to go over for the present.

Mr. WARREN. I have no objection to that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. WARREN. I should be very glad if the Senator would inform himself on this matter so that he may verify what I have stated as to expenses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be regarded as pending.

Mr. DANIEL. May I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. WARREN. I do.

Mr. DANIEL. Are we not about to vacate the Maltby Building?

Mr. WARREN. We have to vacate it soon for the purposes for which we are now using it, and the amendment which I have sent to the desk, and which has just been read, provides that the appropriation may be used in the new Office Building, as well as in the Maltby Building.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 13, after line 14, to insert:

For rent of warehouse for storage of public documents for the Senate, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "House of Representatives," on page 14, line 26, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask, as a matter of information, whether or not it is contemplated that there shall be any provision of law changing these salaries, or whether or not this appropriation bill will fix the salaries hereafter?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the salaries are fixed from time to time. This provision would fix the salary, if we were to continue to appropriate for it, until it might be altered.

Mr. BORAH. This would be legislation on this bill. Mr. President, I raise the point of order as to that proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Idaho state what is his point of order?

Mr. BORAH. My point of order is that the proviso is general legislation.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to appeal to the Senator from Idaho, not especially in reference to the point of order on this one item, but as to comity between the House and the Senate. The House usually make known what it decides to do as to that branch and the Senate as to this branch. In the present bill, however, the exchange of comity provided for the House increasing the emoluments of the Vice-President and the Senate inserting an amendment increasing the same for the Speaker of the House. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not press the point of order on any of these items, although I think, if he does, the point of order will not be sustained.

Mr. BORAH. The only thing I desire is to have some information as to how these salaries are raised. I wish to ascertain whether or not we shall have an opportunity to hereafter pass upon a bill raising salaries, or if this bill will have concluded the matter when these appropriations are passed?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, merely on the point of order, I wish to say that I think it is clear that under the practice of both Houses to increase here what may be called a "standing appropriation" does not come within the rule against new legislation or against the changing of existing law, which is the language of the House provision. It is, or was, recognized in the House by a distinct provision that it is not in order to move to increase an appropriation, but in the Senate there is no such rule, and it has been the uniform practice in bills establishing salaries to increase them, if the Senate so desired. I merely wanted to make that brief statement on the point of order.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the matter can be passed over, I am willing to withdraw the point of order with the understanding that it shall be passed for the day, until I can inform myself as to whether or not we shall have an opportunity to pass upon these matters in another form. I do not propose to pass upon the raising of these salaries without knowing as to that.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will withdraw his point of order now and ask that the amendment lie over until the conclusion of the first reading of the bill, I shall be glad.

Mr. BORAH. Very well, I withdraw the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho withdraws his point of order, and the amendment will be passed for the present.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 18, line 20, before the word "conductors," to strike out "six" and insert "twenty-four;" in line 21, after the word "elevators," to insert "including fourteen for service in the House of Representatives Office Building;" and on page 19, line 5, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-five thousand" and insert "forty-six thousand six hundred," so as to make the clause read:

Under Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds: For chief engineer, $1,900; 3 assistant engineers, at $1,300 each; 24 conductors of elevators, including 14 for service in the House of Representatives Office Building, at $1,200 each, who shall be under the supervision and direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds; machinist, $1,300; electrician, $1,200; 2 laborers, at $820 each; 5 firemen, at $900 each; laborer, $1,000; 3 laborers, at $800 each; in all, $46,640.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 23, before the word "Pensions," to strike out "Naval Affairs;" on page 20, line 1, before the words "in all," to strike out "thirteen" and insert "twelve;" and in line 2, after the word "each," to insert "clerk to Committee on Naval Affairs, $2,400," so as to read:

Clerks to Committees on Agriculture, Claims, District of Columbia, Foreign Affairs, Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Indian Affairs, Judiciary, Military Affairs, Pensions, Public Buildings and Grounds, War Claims, and clerk to continue Digest of Claims under resolution of March 7, 1888, 12 in all, at $2,500 each; clerk to Committee on Naval Affairs, $2,400—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 3, to reduce the total appropriation for "clerks, messengers, and janitors to committees" from $115,820 to $115,720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 8, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "eight;" and in line 9, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "eight," so as to make the clause read:

For clerk to the conference minority of the House of Representatives, $2,000; and for assistant clerk, $1,800; in all, $3,800. Said clerk and assistant clerk to be appointed by the chairman of the conference minority.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, after line 7, to insert:

For purchase, driving, maintenance, and care of carriage or other vehicle, and of horses, for use of the Speaker, $5,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment be permitted to go over.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Copyright Office," on page 35, line 19, before the word "dollars, to insert "five hundred;" and in line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "three thousand," so as to read:

Copyright Office, under the direction of the Librarian of Congress: Register of copyrights, $3,500; assistant register of copyrights, $3,000, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 8, to increase the total appropriation for the copyright office, Library of Congress, from $86,360 to $87,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert "1 assistant, $1,800;" and in line 20, before the word "hundred," to strike out "eight thousand nine" and insert "ten thousand seven," so as to make the clause read:

Indexes, digests, and compilations of law: To continue the preparation of the new index to the Statutes at Large, in accordance with the plan approved by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses of Congress, and to prepare such other law indexes, digests, and compilations of law as may be required by Congress for official use, namely: For 1 chief assistant, $3,000; 1 assistant, $2,400; 1 assistant, $1,800; 1 assistant, $1,200; 1 assistant, $900; 2 assistants, at $720 each; in all, $10,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Executive," on page 41, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty," and insert "one hundred."

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that amendment and the one following be passed over.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator wait until I offer an amendment to the amendment? The committee amendment has not been read in full. I ask that the amendment may be read and that the amendment to the amendment be then stated. Then the Senator can renew his request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 41, line 14, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "fifty," and to insert "one hundred;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "this sum to include all transportation expenses not otherwise provided for by law, and this provision to take effect on March 4, 1909," so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the President of the United States, $100,000, this sum to include all transportation expenses not otherwise provided for by law, and this provision to take effect on March 4, 1909.

Mr. WARREN. I now offer the amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk. It is to correct an error by inserting the word "now" where the word "not" occurs in line 15.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, in line 16, page 41, after the word "expenses," it is proposed to strike out the word "not" and insert the word "now."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be regarded as pending and the entire amendment passed over for the present.

Mr. WARREN. Do I understand the amendment to the amendment is agreed to?

Mr. BORAH. There is no objection on my part to the amendment to the amendment which has just been stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the amendment to the amendment will be regarded as agreed to, and the amendment of the committee will be passed over, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. McLAURIN. As I understand, the amendment that is agreed to is the one offered by the Senator from Wyoming, striking out the word "not" and inserting the word "now."

Mr. WARREN. That is all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill, as some of the amendments increasing salaries have gone over, that the Senator allow the remainder of them, including the amendment increasing the salaries of judges, to go over until the reading of the bill shall have been completed.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest to the Senator that I would prefer that the committee amendments be read as the reading of the bill proceeds.

Mr. CLAY. I mean that they shall not now be acted upon.

Mr. WARREN. I should prefer that they be read, and then the Senator from Georgia or any other Senator may ask that they shall lie over. I shall not contend against that proposition.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 41, line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert "to take effect on March 4, 1909;" so as to make the clause read:

For compensation of the Vice-President of the United States, $20,000, to take effect on March 4, 1909.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that amendment also be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 42, after line 23, to insert:

For purchase, driving, maintenance, and care of carriage or other vehicle, and of horses, for use of the Vice-President, $5,000.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that amendment be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over, at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 44, line 26, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Under Secretary of State, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall perform such duties as the Secretary of State may designate and as may be provided by law, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. CLAY. I inquire, Mr. President, if the amendment on page 45, providing for the appointment of an Under Secretary of State at a salary of $10,000 was agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I did not hear it read as an amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was read and agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. It escaped my attention at the time.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator intended to ask to have that amendment lie over——

Mr. CLAY. I certainly intended to ask that it should go over with the other amendments.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; there is no objection to that. Let the amendment lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 45, line 6, after the word "each," to insert:

Fourth Assistant Secretary of State, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall perform such duties as the Secretary of State may designate and as may be provided by law, $4,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 18, on page 45, as follows:

Two assistant solicitors of the Department of State, to be appointed by the Secretary of State, at $3,000 each; law clerk, and assistant, to be selected and appointed by the Secretary of State, to edit the laws of Congress and perform such other duties as may be required of them, at $2,500 and $1,500, respectively.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think that last item should go over for consideration. We should have a report as to the progress that has been made upon that work. I have had some occasion to inquire in regard to it, and I think we should know a little more about it. In the meantime I will look into it.

Mr. WARREN. To what does the Senator allude?

Mr. HEYBURN. To the item providing for the indexing of the laws of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator understand that that is new matter?

Mr. HEYBURN. On page 45?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; in lines 14, 15, and 16.

Mr. HEYBURN. I see the item. I should like to inquire if this is the work of indexing the laws or statutes at large?

Mr. WARREN. For the use of the State Department; yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. Only for the use of the State Department?

Mr. WARREN. I said they do the work in the State Department, but it is for general use.

Mr. HEYBURN. But the work, I think, is being performed for libraries.

Mr. WARREN. No; that is entirely another thing.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is a different proposition?

Mr. WARREN. Yes.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is the item covering work that is being done for the libraries that I desire to have passed over.

Mr. WARREN. This is different from that.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then I withdraw my suggestion.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 46, line 1, after the word "dollars," to insert "said private secretary and clerk to the Secretary of State to be appointed by the Secretary of State; private secretary to the Under Secretary of State, $2,500; clerk to the Under Secretary of State, $1,500;" and in line 10, after the word "each," to insert "private messenger to the Secretary of State, $1,000," so as to read:

Private secretary to the Secretary, $2,500; clerk to the Secretary of State, $1,800, said private secretary and clerk to the Secretary of State to be appointed by the Secretary of State; private secretary to the Under Secretary of State, $2,500; clerk to the Under Secretary of State, $1,500; 15 clerks of class 4; 15 clerks of class 3; 25 clerks of class 2; 40 clerks of class 1, 2 of whom shall be telegraph operators; 15 clerks, at $1,000 each; 19 clerks, at $900 each; private messengers to the Secretary of State, $1,000—

And so forth.

Mr. CLAY. That amendment should necessarily go over, inasmuch as it relates to other amendments which have been passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HEYBURN. I now have with more accuracy the item to which I intended to direct my remarks. It is on page 35, lines 10 to 16, inclusive. I should like it passed over.

Mr. WARREN. That has already been agreed to, but the Senator will have an opportunity to offer amendments at the conclusion of the committee amendments. We have already passed it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to ask that it be considered as not passed upon. I may not happen to be present at the exact moment when it is reached. I should like to know something about the conduct of the work, which I can readily ascertain. I now have some knowledge on the subject.

Mr. WARREN. I myself have no objections to passing it over if the Senate will give its consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be passed over.

Mr. WARREN. I suggest to the Senator from Idaho that he look into the matter carefully, because I am not quite sure that is the point to which he wishes to refer. I understand he wishes at a later time to bring it up. I express my willingness to allow that to be done.

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not want to delay the matter. In a few moments I can state what I wish done.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 155, line 4, after the word "one," to strike out "three" and insert "four;" in line 5, before the word "clerks," where it occurs the second time, to sert "thirty-six thousand six," so as to make the clause read: word "all" to strike out "thirty-four thousand seven" and insert "thirty-six thousand six," so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Manufactures: Chief of bureau, $4,000; assistant chief of bureau, $2,500; chief of division, $2,100; stenographer to chief of bureau, $1,600; 2 clerks of class 4; 1 clerk of class 3; 2 clerks of class 2; 4 clerks of class 1; 4 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 clerks, at $900 each; 4 assistant messengers; 2 laborers; in all, $36,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 155, line 18, to increase the appropriation "to enable the Bureau of Manufactures to collate and arrange in the Bureau of Manufactures the tariffs of foreign countries in form for distribution, to be printed in the English language," etc., from $5,500 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization," on page 160, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" in line 4, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" and in line 12, after the word "all," to strike out "forty-five thousand six" and insert "forty-seven thousand one," so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization: For Commissioner-General of Immigration, $5,000; Assistant Commissioner-General, who shall also act as chief clerk and actuary, $3,500; private secretary, $1,800; statistician and stenographer, with authority to act as immigrant inspector, $2,000; 2 clerks of class 4; 3 clerks of class 3; 5 clerks of class 2; 3 clerks of class 1; 8 clerks, at $1,000 each; 6 clerks, at $900 each; 2 messengers; 1 assistant messenger; in all, $47,100, which, together with all other expenses of regulating immigration, shall be paid from the permanent appropriation for expenses of regulating immigration.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 160, line 24, before the word "clerks," to strike out "seven" and insert "eight;" in line 25, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" and on page 161, line 3, after the word "all," to strike out "thirty-eight thousand nine" and insert "forty-one thousand one," so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," namely: Chief of Division of Naturalization, $3,500; assistant chief of division, $2,500; 3 clerks of class 4; 3 clerks of class 3; 5 clerks of class 2; 8 clerks of class 1; 5 clerks, at $1,000 each; 2 clerks, at $900 each; 1 messenger; 1 assistant messenger; in all $41,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 164, after line 20, to strike out:

For the investigation of the Pentane, Hefner, and other flame standards used in the measurement of the illuminating power of gas, and determining the accuracy practically obtainable in such measurements; also for the determination of the heats of combustion of certain gases which occur in illuminating gas, which are used as a basis for computing the heat value of the gas, and for the determination of the heats of combustion of materials employed by engineers in the standardization of industrial calorimeter, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 165, after line 11, to strike out:

For the necessary professional and skilled labor, purchase of materials, tools, and appliances for operating the testing machines transferred to the Department of Commerce and Labor by act approved May 27, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 354), for transportation, for investigative tests, and for test of United States material for constructions, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 165, after line 19, to insert:

The provision in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, transferring the testing machines at the Watertown Arsenal to the Department of Commerce and Labor is hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 24, on page 166.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I presume that the Senator in charge of the bill will let the amendments in the succeeding clauses under the head of "Judicial," on page 167, go over to be acted upon at the same time that we act upon other amendments that have already been passed over.

Mr. WARREN. The request of the Senator from Georgia, I suppose, applies to the entire schedule of enlargements of judicial salaries found in this bill?

Mr. CLAY. That is correct.

Mr. WARREN. As to the pay of all the judges?

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; let those amendments lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming insist on the present reading of the amendments, or shall their reading be passed over?

Mr. WARREN. I think it would be better to state the amendments, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments referred to, and after being read they will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY].

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Judicial," on page 167, line 3, to increase the appropriation for the salary of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States from $13,000 to $18,000, and, in line 4, to increase the appropriation for the salaries of eight associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States from $12,500 each to $17,500 each.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the arrangement made, the amendment will be passed over for the present.

The next amendment was, on page 167, line 11, to increase the total appropriations for the Supreme Court of the United States from $130,900 to $175,900.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 167, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "ten," and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "three" and insert "ninety," so as to make the clause read:

Circuit courts: For 29 circuit judges, at $10,000 each, $290,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 167, line 20, to increase the total appropriation for circuit courts from $237,500 to $324,500.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 167, line 23, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" and in line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five hundred and four" and insert "six hundred and seventy-two," so as to make the clause read:

District courts: For salaries of the 84 district judges of the United States, at $8,000 each, $672,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 168, line 13, before the word "dollars," to strike out "seven thousand five hundred" and insert "ten thousand;" and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seven" and insert "ten," so as to make the clause read:

Court of appeals, District of Columbia: For the chief justice of court of appeals of the District of Columbia, $10,000; and for 2 associate justices, at $10,000 each.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 169, line 5, to increase the total appropriation for the court of appeals, District of Columbia, from $35,160 to $43,660.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 169, line 10, after the word "Columbia," to insert "eight thousand five hundred dollars;" in line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eight;" and in line 15, before the word "hundred," to strike out "forty-one thousand four" and insert "fifty-three thousand nine," so as to make the clause read:

Supreme court, District of Columbia: For salaries of the chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $8,500, and of the five associate judges, at $8,000 each; six stenographers, one for the chief justice and one for each associate justice, at $900 each; in all, $53,900, one-half of which shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, on page 170, line 12, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six thousand five hundred" and insert "eight thousand;" and in line 14, before the word "dollars," to strike out "six thousand" and insert "seven thousand five hundred," so as to read:

Court of Claims: For the chief justice of the Court of Claims, $8,000; 4 judges, at $7,500 each.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment was, in the items for the Court of Claims, on page 170, line 22, after the word "dollars," to insert "two assistant messengers," so as to read:

Elevator conductor, $720; 2 assistant messengers; 1 laborer; and 2 charwomen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 170, line 23, to increase the total appropriation for the Court of Claims from $55,820 to $63,320.

Mr. WARREN. In view of the fact that the amendment to increase the salaries of the judges of the Court of Claims has been passed over, the amendment increasing the total should also be passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over in the absence of objection.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. NELSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, have the committee amendments been completed?

Mr. WARREN. No, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendments have been considered, except those which have been passed over.

Mr. NELSON. I supposed they would be passed over for a while.

Mr. WARREN. The committee amendments passed over now come up in their regular order.

Mr. NELSON. I supposed the bill was now open to amendment.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I understand the present status of the bill the entire bill has now been read, but we have not passed upon several of the committee amendments. I think it would be in order now to turn back and commence at the beginning of the bill with such amendments as have been passed over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is correct. The Secretary will state the first amendment which was passed over.

The Secretary read the first amendment passed over, which was, on page 13, after line 12, to insert:

For miscellaneous items on account of the Maltby Building and Senate Office Building, $18,480.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], who asked that that amendment be laid over, does not now wish to object to it.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator in charge of the bill has sent me a statement of the salaries paid to employees in that building, giving the number, which is equal to the amount involved in this appropriation. That statement is satisfactory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 14, line 26, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on that item the point of order was made this morning, and I desire to say a few words to correct what I said earlier in the day. I spoke hastily, and in regard to the rules of the House, inaccurately, because I was speaking from my memory of the rules of the House, which have since been changed.

The point of order as made, as I understand, goes against this item of increase in the salary of the Speaker on the ground that it is general legislation. Of course, under the rules of the House, which provide that any amendment which changes existing law can not be received, this amendment would clearly fall; but the Senate rule uses the words "general legislation," which are very different and much less restrictive in their scope.

Considering that point first, I do not think, Mr. President, that an amendment to increase the salary of an individual for whom we are appropriating can properly be described as general legislation. If a Senator offers an amendment changing the salaries of an entire class of persons, that would unquestionably be general legislation. So much for that on the point of general legislation.

But, Mr. President, it is perfectly clear to my mind that these items are taken out of the scope and meaning of general legislation by the rules of the Senate. Rule XVI, page 16, provides:

> No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill or to add a new item of appropriation.

Later, on the same page, occurs a broad provision against general legislation. I submit that the increase of an appropriation and a new item of appropriation are by the first paragraph of that rule distinctly differentiated from general legislation, and are put in a class by themselves.

General legislation, as I understand the intent of this rule, is not legislation that carries an item of appropriation already in the bill, or a new item of appropriation, but is general legislation in the ordinary acceptation of the term. However that may be, there is no question, it seems to me, that increasing an existing item or adding a new item is expressly taken out of the operation of the prohibitions of this rule by the first clause of Rule XVI. They are taken out under certain conditions. An amendment to increase an item or to add a new item of appropriation is in order, if it is added—

> To carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

This item, increasing the salary of the Speaker, whether it be general legislation or not, is an increase of an item of appropriation contained in the bill. The Speaker's salary must be provided for in this bill. It has been reported by a standing committee of the Senate, and therefore fulfills the condition of the exception.

When we distributed the appropriation bills, the Appropriations Committee up to that time having had charge of all appropriation bills, the question arose—and I remember making the point—that an increase in an item of appropriation proposed by the committee reporting the bill did not meet the conditions of the rule; that the rule intended that there should be a report from two committees; and that to be made in order a standing committee, in addition to the one which reported the bill, was required to report the item. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], then presiding as President pro tempore of the Senate, overruled my point of order and held that a standing committee reporting a new item of appropriation or an increase of an existing item fulfilled the requirements of the rule, and that the fact that they had also reported the bill did not affect the exception which the rule provides.

I was convinced subsequently that that ruling was correct. At all events, that ruling has stood, so far as the relation of the committee was concerned. Therefore, under the ruling of the Senator from Maine, this item of appropriation has been increased by a standing committee, the Committee on Appropriations, and is brought within the exception made by the rule.

It is not, in my judgment, general legislation; but whether it is or not, it comes within the carefully specified class of an increased item of appropriation or that of a new item. It comes within one of those two classes, which are the only two classes that can be made in order by the action of a standing committee.

I desired simply, Mr. President, as I stated my point very briefly and, I think, inaccurately, this morning, that I might state it more accurately before it was decided by the Chair.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am in accord with the Senator in favoring this amendment. I think it is right, just, and reasonable; and when we are going on so largely and enormously to increase appropriations for other branches of the Government, for the military arms, by tens and twenties of millions of dollars, I think we need not be niggardly in making mild and reasonable increases on the salary list.

But I rose to say that, considering the future and the frequency with which this question of order is likely to be raised, I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. I look upon this as general legislation. But that, Mr. President, is a disputed point. Arguments have been made upon both sides, and it may, perhaps, be accounted as a debatable question. I have no question in my own mind that a law fixing a salary, whether it is one salary or twenty, is general legislation. We create a Supreme Court, and we provide that it shall consist of nine judges at certain salaries. I do not think we can increase the number of that court to ten and, on the ground that it is only a distinctive proposition for one man, contend that it is not general legislation; nor do I think we can raise the salary of any one of those men on the ground that, it being for one man, it is not general legislation. It is all general legislation as opposed to private legislation.

But, Mr. President, I do not contend that this view which I have has always been maintained. It has been traversed and denied at different times, and there have been rulings both ways upon this subject. All I desired in taking the floor for these few remarks was to save any question that might come up hereafter. It has been considered in the Senate a doubtful question—sometimes decided one way and sometimes the other; sometimes submitted by the Chair to the House, and sometimes decided either way. My own opinion is very clear on the subject.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I do not suppose the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] will contend that if we adopt all these amendments the appropriations for the military establishments during the present session will be decreased. The Senator contends that we have been very extravagant in making appropriations for the army and the navy. I predict that the naval appropriation bill of the present session of Congress will carry $140,000,000—more than it ever has carried in any other period in the history of our country. I predict that in less than four years the appropriations for the naval service will be larger, much larger, than those of any other country in the world.

Mr. President, these amendments, if we adopt them, will make increases as follows: The President's salary is now $50,000; the increase will be $50,000. The Vice-President's salary is $12,000; the increase will be $8,000. The present salary of the Speaker is $12,000; the increase will be $8,000. These increases will equal $66,000, and the carriages and horses provided for the Vice-President and the Speaker will be $10,000; equal in all to $76,000.

Now, turn to the judges, and I am willing to increase their salaries to a reasonable extent. I know of no official body more important to our country than a well-paid and a high-class judiciary, but I must confess that I had much rather have seen the salaries of the associate justices fixed at $15,000 instead of $17,500. It has been only a short while since we increased their salaries. Now, let us see what increases we make.

Take the Supreme Court of the United States. The present salary of the Chief Justice is $13,000. We make it $18,000, an increase of $5,000. The associate justices now receive $12,500; we make their salaries by this bill $17,500, a total increase of $40,000. There are 29 circuit judges. Their present salary is $7,000. We make the salary by this bill $10,000; equal to a total increase of $87,000 per annum.

I believe there are 84 district judges. Their present salary is $6,000. We make the salary $8,000, an increase of $168,000. Take the court of appeals of the District of Columbia. The present salary of the chief justice is $7,500. We make the salary $10,000, an increase of $2,500; associate justices now receive $7,000; we increase it to $10,000, making an increase of $6,000. The chief justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia is increased from $6,000 to $8,500, an increase of $2,500. The associate judges of the Court of Claims at present receive a salary of $6,000 and we make it $8,000, an increase of $10,000.

The total increase per annum in the salaries of the judges by this bill will be $328,500, and the increase in the salaries of the President, Vice-President, and Speaker of the House will be $76,000, making an annual increase of $404,500.

If the Speaker's salary was put at $15,000, so far as I am concerned I would raise no point about it. I do not believe we can justify fixing the salary of the Speaker at $20,000, and give him also $5,000 for a carriage and horses, making his income $25,000 per annum, and at the same time making the salary of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States $18,000 per year. I do not remember whether in the history of this country we have ever made the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives greater than the salary of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Then, again, you take your district judges. My observation teaches me that the district judges are engaged almost the entire time in the trial of criminal cases for violation of the revenue laws, and so forth. You increase their salaries only $2,000, and you increase that of the circuit judges from $7,000 to $10,000 per year.

But, Mr. President, I do not like the idea of giving the Speaker of the House of Representatives—and I entertain for him the highest respect and recognize his great ability—carriages and horses. I had rather vote for a salary of $25,000 per year than to begin a practice of that kind. I do not refer to the salaries of Senators. The position of a Senator in importance is equal to that of the Speaker or of an associate justice of the Supreme Court. You pay your Senators $7,500 per year. You propose to pay your associate justices of the Supreme Court $17,500 per year.

In regard to the salary of the President of the United States and the increase that is proposed to be made at this time, it does not apply to the present Chief Magistrate of the Nation. No one can charge me, simply because I oppose this increase, with entertaining any unkind feeling either to the present Chief Magistrate or to our newly elected President. It is simply a question of principle. At first I was exceedingly anxious to know how much money we expend for the purpose of keeping up the White House. It is an item of importance. How much do we pay for light; how much do we pay for water, and for fuel, and for servants, and for carriages and horses? If the President of the United States had to bear all this expense, a salary of $200,000 per year would not be too much.

But, if I understand our appropriations in the past, we have provided liberally for these expenses to which I refer. I do not say that we have provided too liberally, but, to say the least of it, a measure of this kind fixing the salary of the President and the Vice-President and the judiciary ought to be most maturely considered and every surrounding circumstance looked into before we reach a conclusion.

It is not proper that I should refer to what happened in the Committee on Appropriations. It is true that this item of salaries of the judiciary was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and reported to the Appropriations Committee, and we adopted their conclusions. I believe the matter of the salary of the President and the Vice-President and the Speaker was referred to the Finance Committee, and that report came to the Committee on Appropriations, and we adopted their conclusion.

Now, let us look for a moment and see what we have given heretofore. I do not refer to this fact for the purpose of criticising our action. I maintain that the President of the United States ought to live in a dignified way, in keeping with the high office he holds.

But I say, further, that his great usefulness does not depend upon the fact that he lives in a sumptuous way. A simple life, high thinking and plain living, always brings the best results. The men who have made this Nation the greatest in the world have been men who have lived simple, industrious lives and have spent their time hard at work and have not lived luxurious lives.

Now, let us see. In the first place, I hold before me the sundry civil appropriation act of last year, and there are these items for the Executive Mansion; and I approve every one of them. I simply refer to these items to show why we ought not without due consideration to make these increases. Now, first:

> Executive Mansion: For ordinary care, repair, and refurnishing of Executive Mansion, and for purchase, maintenance, and driving of horses and vehicles for official purposes, to be expended by contract or otherwise, as the President may determine, $35,000.
> For fuel for the Executive Mansion greenhouses and stable, $6,000.
> For care and maintenance of greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $9,000.
> For repairs to greenhouses, Executive Mansion, $3,000.
> For traveling expenses of the President of the United States, to be expended in his discretion and accounted for on his certificate solely, $25,000.

I will not take the time to read these items, but I will say that the total sum carried by the appropriation bills during the last session of Congress for this purpose—and I do not claim that it was too much—was $196,000. In fixing the salary of the Chief Magistrate of the Nation we are bound to consider how much money we expend for fuel, how much for light, and how much we spend in paying the expenses of the White House before we can reach a conclusion as to what is just and right and proper. But that item is not now before us. We are simply considering the item with respect to the Speaker of the House of Representatives. When Members of the House had a salary of $5,000 the Speaker had a salary of $8,000. Now Members of Congress have a salary of $7,500, and why should the salary of the Speaker exceed $15,000? If I was going to change the salary of the Chief Justice and the associate justices, I would fix the Chief Justice's salary at $15,500 and that of the associate justices $500 less. I am perfectly willing to vote for and support an amendment of that kind, but if we readjust these salaries we shall have done an injustice to the 84 district judges in the United States in not raising their salaries in proportion to the salaries of the circuit judges of the country.

Mr. President, again, I do not believe that we ought to attempt to legislate on appropriation bills in this way. You can insert this legislation on appropriation bills—and we pass upon them hurriedly—and they do not have that mature consideration which they ought to have. In fixing the salaries of the federal judiciary, the salaries of the President and the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, in my judgment, it ought to be done by separate legislation, referred to the appropriate committees, and most carefully and maturely considered.

Mr. President, with respect to the rule of the Senate, I agree with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. We have three divisions of Rule XVI. The first division provides:

> And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

That provision of the rule, as I understand, refers simply to where an item is increased or a new item added to an appropriation. In a case of that kind, then, if it has been referred to another committee and back to the Committee on Appropriations, it will be considered in order. The same rule applies to the second provision of Rule XVI. But now, when you come to new and general legislation, a different rule applies:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

Mr. President, if changing the existing law fixing the salaries of the judiciary of this country is not general legislation, then I confess that I do not understand what general legislation means.

Mr. President, there is a general law on the statute books, passed but a few years ago, fixing the salaries of the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court and district judges and circuit judges, and this bill proposes to change that law, fixing a different rule, and in my opinion it is general legislation and subject to that rule.

Mr. President, we are not trying to carry out existing law. We are not trying to add a new item to this appropriation. We are passing a general statute fixing the salaries of the federal judiciary, the Vice-President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives; and it is, under this rule, when we change a general law fixing a different salary, clearly general legislation and in violation of the rule; and the fact that the amendment was referred to another committee and reported favorably, in my opinion, does not change that rule.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] says this question has been decided both ways. If it has, certainly it has been decided right one time or the other, and, in my opinion, when it was decided that it was general legislation it was a correct ruling, and by it we ought to abide. I will admit that the presiding officer, if he desires to do so, may submit this question of order to the Senate of the United States.

> All questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate.

Does that not apply to relevancy? Now, if it was a question of relevancy, then clearly it should be submitted to the Senate, but if it is a question of general legislation, in my opinion, that point does not apply.

I have occupied more of the time of the Senate than I intended, Mr. President. To say the least of it, if we are going to increase the salaries we ought to rearrange them. We ought not to go as far as we have gone, and we ought to equalize these salaries in proportion to the dignity of the positions and the work performed by these various officials.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, when I addressed the Chair a few moments ago, when the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] was recognized, I intended to express the opinion merely that this proposed amendment is objectionable under the third paragraph of Rule XVI. In view of what has been said by the Senator from Maine and by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], it is unnecessary for me to do more than to express my concurrence in the opinion they have announced, and I think the point of order made by the Senator from Idaho is well taken.

While I have the floor, however, I desire to say that I propose to offer an amendment—I offer it now, for submission at the proper time—on page 15, line 3, to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "eighteen," so that the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall at least not receive a higher salary than the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the proposed amendment would not be in order until after the point of order has been determined.

Mr. CULBERSON. I so understood, and did not desire to express a contrary opinion. I said I would state the amendment now, for submission at the proper time, as I think the record will show; at least that was my purpose.

All I have to say, Mr. President, is that the proposition to place the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives above that of the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court is contrary to all precedent, so far as I am advised; and without reference to the merits of the proposition as to how much the Speaker ought to receive, I content myself with asserting that in my judgment he should not receive more than the Chief Justice and associate justices, and I will move that amendment at the proper time.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, the item we are discussing is an appropriation already contained in the bill, and we propose to increase the amount. Under the rule—

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill—

unless certain things are done. Here is an appropriation already contained in the bill. There is a proposition to increase it. It is not in order unless it be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate. It has been moved by a standing committee, the Committee on Appropriations, and certainly beyond all question comes within this rule.

It is an appropriation already in the bill. This is an effort to increase it, and it is moved by a standing committee of the Senate. So if the rule means anything it means just what it says, that an appropriation already in the bill can be increased when it is moved by a standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes, sir.

Mr. FULTON. Is there a statute on this subject?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Only a provision in an appropriation bill.

Mr. FULTON. There has been no general statute?

Mr. HEMENWAY. No general statute that I know of, except the law enacted in an appropriation bill.

As to the merits of the proposition——

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Does the Senator from Indiana say there is no general statute fixing the salaries of Members of Congress and of the Speaker?

Mr. HEMENWAY. We may have passed a statute when we increased the salaries.

Mr. CLAY. I think I can show the Senator the general statute.

Mr. HEMENWAY. But as a rule, and I think even in this case, they have been fixed in the appropriation bills, have they not? I think the salaries of Members of the House and of the Speaker and of members of this body were fixed in the appropriation bill—in the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAY. I believe the last time they were.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. The question in my mind is whether or not the provisions being in a general appropriation bill, they are continuing provisions. It is my impression that there is a continuing provision, but I am not certain.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It does not make any difference whether it is fixed by statute or by an appropriation bill. This rule provides that where an item is in an appropriation bill and you seek to increase the item you can only do it by a report from a standing committee.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me to say a word in reply to what he has just said?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I will permit the Senator to ask a question. I want to proceed.

Mr. CLAY. I will not consume more than half a minute.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Very well.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator is fully aware of the fact, for he always keeps up with the business of Congress, that the law fixing the salaries of the federal judiciary was a special law——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. CLAY. Which we passed here, and that is certainly a law continuous in its nature until changed.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I am not discussing that now. I am discussing this provision affecting the increase of the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Now, then, just briefly as to the merits. The salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the salary of the Vice-President of the United States have always been the same. The same reason that is given for the increase in the salary of the President of the United States has been given and is given for the increase of the salary of the Vice-President and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Whether it is right or wrong, there has grown up the custom of the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House entertaining just as the President of the United States entertains. Whatever amount is fixed for the Vice-President's salary, the Speaker's salary should be the same. Whether $20,000 is too much or too little, I think we all know that neither the Vice-President nor the Speaker can live in Washington and entertain even in a limited way and pay their expenses with a salary of $20,000.

As the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has stated, this question has been decided both ways; but I think when it was decided by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that an increase of an appropriation already in the bill was in order when reported from a standing committee he properly interpreted the rule, because it can not mean anything else. It says in plain language that an appropriation already contained in the bill can only be increased when the increase is moved by a standing committee of the Senate. The increase in this particular instance has been moved by two standing committees—the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, some of the Senators who have been debating this question seem to have lost sight of the fact that instead of the merits of the proposition to give the Speaker of the House of Representatives $20,000 there is a point of order made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] as to the right of the Senate, under its rules, to inject into the appropriation bill this general legislation. There is no question of the increase of an item of appropriation; there is no question of the moving of an increase by any standing committee of the Senate; but it is a question as to whether this is general legislation or whether it is a private snap.

I can not see for my life how there can be in any judicial mind a moment's doubt as to this being general legislation. It is either general legislation or it is private legislation. If it is general legislation, it is for the public. If it is private legislation, it is for the individual who receives the money.

If I may be permitted for a moment to digress, without infringing the rule which I laid down for others, I wish to say that the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President of the United States, the President of the United States, and all the different officers are supposed to be paid for their services. It is supposed that they are in the employ of the Government and that the Government is paying them for the services rendered.

It is no part of the service of a Vice-President or of a Speaker of the House of Representatives to entertain. If the Vice-President and the Speaker are able to entertain, it is very gratifying, not only to themselves but to their friends. I am gratified by the fact that they do entertain, but that is no part of the compensation.

Now, Mr. President, having digressed this much, and I wish to say that according to my judgment this is the part of Rule XVI which is impinged by the proposition here to make a law that the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall hereafter be $20,000 instead of being $12,000, as it is now. It is proposed to provide that after the 3d of March next it shall be $20,000. Does anybody pretend that is not a general law?

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Senator will allow me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McLAURIN. With great pleasure.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I wish to call attention again to the rule. If it means anything, it means that this increase can be made on an appropriation bill under the general provision of clause 3. This amendment was reported from the Committee on Finance to the Senate with a favorable report and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and by them reported. Let us follow the rule just a minute—

And no amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill—unless it has been reported from a standing or select committee.

This provision has been reported from two standing committees. Now, what is the item that we seek to increase? It is an item already contained in the appropriation bill. Then, if this rule means anything, does it not mean just the case we have before us? It is an item already contained in an appropriation bill and we seek to increase it. It has been reported from two standing committees of the Senate—the Finance Committee and the Committee on Appropriations. If the rule means anything at all, it fits this case, and it is taken out of the provision of clause 3.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, the Senator is a good lawyer. Does he not know that if the rule had said that in every instance where the item of increase is moved by a committee it shall be in order, it matters not whether it impinges any other provision or not? But will not the Senator look at clause 2 of Rule XVI? It says that—

No amendment shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless, etc.

Now, that is one prohibition, but that is not all the prohibition. If there is general legislation proposed it shall not be admitted any more than an increase of the appropriation. Does the Senator not see that you can not offer an amendment that increases an item of appropriation unless certain things are done? But neither can you legislate generally.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield further to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. McLAURIN. With pleasure.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I wish to state my point. Here is an item contained in an appropriation bill. No one doubts that. There is an item in the bill providing $12,000 for the salary of the Speaker. That is correct, is it not? Then it is an item contained in an appropriation bill. This rule provides that where an item is contained in an appropriation bill it can not be increased unless it has been reported from a standing or select committee of the Senate. Here is an item already in the bill appropriating a salary of $12,000. Here is an effort to increase it. Here are two standing committees that have reported favorably on the increase. Does not that bring it within the provision of the rule? If it does not, what kind of an item would come within the provision of the rule?

Mr. McLAURIN. I will answer the Senator if he will just give me time. The Senator feels that he has shown that this does not contravene that provision of the rule. Now, grant that. I am not going to argue it. Let it be granted that it does not contravene that provision of the rule. But this is the provision of the rule it does contravene:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Must this contravene every provision in the rule; or if it contravenes any one of them, is it not sufficient?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The Senator seems to forget that these rules must be construed as a whole.

Mr. McLAURIN. That is right; they must be construed as a whole.

Mr. HEMENWAY. And here is a limitation upon the provision of clause 3 providing that certain things can be done. The rule must be construed as a whole. If you take clause 3 and just say that is all there is of the rules of the Senate, any one of these items is general legislation, in my judgment; when you change an existing law you are legislating, and when you raise any man's salary from $10 to $15 you are legislating.

Mr. McLAURIN. That is what I say.

Mr. HEMENWAY. You could not do it if you followed the provisions of clause 3, but there are certain limitations of the rule that are to be taken together. This rule specifically fixes the rule for appropriation bills—the rule I have read to the Senate two or three times.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator fails to see the distinction that this is not an enabling rule, that it is a prohibitory rule, and it prohibits unless certain things are done. Simply because it does not contravene the provision to which he alludes, he takes it for granted that if it contravenes any other provision, therefore, there is no harm done. I grant that, so far as increasing an item of appropriation, it would probably authorize the increase of an appropriation, if that were all. But that is not all. It is not all of the prohibitions that are contained in Rule XVI. Rule XVI prohibits the raising of an item of appropriation. It prohibits general legislation. Now, there is an exception in the case of raising an item of appropriation. It puts that exception in there and it may not contravene that part of it, but it does contravene the part of the rule which says that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill."

That is the point. This is general legislation. It can not be denied that it is general legislation. The Senator has admitted that it is general legislation to raise the salary from $12,000 to $20,000. If that is so, if it were a mere matter of increasing the item of appropriation, there would be no trouble about it; but it proposes to legislate and fix what the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be after the 3d of next March.

It is making a new law, and it does not make any difference whether appropriations have been made to the Speaker of the House of Representatives heretofore without any law fixing his salary, because, if you make a law now, it is a general legislation. If you propose to make a law now that the salary shall be $20,000, it is general legislation. But let us suppose that it is a private snap, and that nobody is interested in it but one man. Clause 4 says:

No amendment the object of which is to provide for a private claim shall be received to any general appropriation bill, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation, which shall be cited on the face of an amendment.

So the Senator from Indiana seems not to have gotten into the whole gist of this rule. There are four clauses and there are a number of prohibitions here. One of them is the prohibition to increase an item of appropriation. Another is the prohibition of any general legislation. If the legislation here intended contravenes any of these, it is to be ruled out on this point of order; that is the rule.

Now, we ought to observe our rules. It will not do to say that just simply because we desire to have this or that matter enacted we will disregard the rules and override them. We might just as well have no rules. The Senate might as well do business without any rules at all as to override the rules whenever convenience suggest.

Mr. FULTON obtained the floor.

Mr. PILES. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FULTON. I yield for a moment, as the Senator wishes to ask a question.

Mr. PILES. I was interested in the construction of the rule, and I should like to get the Senator's view on it.

Mr. McLAURIN. If I have any views I will give them with pleasure.

Mr. PILES. I understand the Senator that subdivision 3 of Rule XVI absolutely controls subdivisions 1 and 2. As I understand the Senator's argument, that is correct.

Mr. McLAURIN. The Senator must let me say to him that I do not say that. I do not contend nor pretend that subdivision 3 controls any other part of the rule, but I do contend this, and it seems to me that it is incontrovertible——

Mr. PILES. Let me ask the Senator further——

Mr. McLAURIN. Just let me finish. I do contend that by the legislation proposed here, whether it is the increase of an item of appropriation, whether it is general legislation, whether it is a private claim, brought in without any general law to support it, whatever it is, if the legislation impinges either one of these four clauses, then it is objectionable and ought to go out on a point of order. Now, is not that true?

Mr. PILES. As I understand the Senator——

Mr. McLAURIN. Does the Senator contend that it must contravene all four of the subdivisions before it goes out?

Mr. PILES. I understand the Senator's argument to be that no item which increases an item already provided for in an appropriation bill may be added under the provisions of this subdivision if it proposes general legislation. Is that the Senator's argument?

Mr. McLAURIN. I must have been very infelicitous——

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not care to yield further.

Mr. McLAURIN. I should like to answer that.

Mr. PILES. I understand the Senator to make that argument.

Mr. McLAURIN. No, sir. The argument I make is that if this——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield further?

Mr. FULTON. I think I must insist on the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon declines to yield further.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I do not know whether this question will be submitted to the Senate or not, but if it should be I wish to state my views briefly in order to fully explain the vote I shall cast.

I take it that no one will question that where a provision proposes to change an existing statute it is general legislation. I do not think that the clauses in the first paragraph of Rule XVI has any particular bearing on this question. They might have bearing were it not for the fact that the proposed amendment went to a standing committee and has been reported by that standing committee. But we have an existing law, a continuing law, a general statute, which provides:

That on and after March 4, 1907, the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Vice-President of the United States, and the heads of the executive departments who are members of the President's Cabinet shall be at the rate of $12,000 per annum each.

That is a general statute. Subdivision 3 of Rule XVI provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

Will anyone contend that a provision which proposes to change a general law is not general legislation? Very ingeniously it is argued by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] that we must construe all these provisions together, and he says that unless we can in some instances by general legislation carry out a proposed increase, therefore this provision does not apply, because, he says, under the provisions of the first paragraph of Rule XVI, if they submit a proposed increase of an item of appropriation to a standing committee and it be reported, then it is in order; but he argues, as I understand it, that it would still be in order if you could not by general legislation carry it into effect.

But, Mr. President, the argument is fallacious and unsound, in my judgment. The provisions to which reference has been made are in the first paragraph of Rule XVI, namely, that—

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session, or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

That is simply where it is proposed to increase an item already in a bill. It has no reference whatever to general legislation, unless it be a case where it is necessary to increase it in order to carry out existing law.

But here is a provision in this bill, added by the committee, which provides that the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum. That is not to carry out any existing statute. It is not merely increasing an existing item in the bill.

There is an item in the bill providing for the annual salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The language here employed is not necessary to increase that salary. It is inserted for the purpose of changing the general existing law. It operates not otherwise; and if you can enact legislation of that character and carry it in an appropriation bill, I undertake to say there is no legislation that may not be adopted in exactly that way.

The Senator from Indiana made another statement as to its being necessary for the consideration of this proposition, on which I beg in all deference to take issue. He says that this is necessary because it is a policy that has obtained and should be preserved, of continuing——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President——

Mr. FULTON. I will yield in just a second. If I misquote the Senator, then he will correct me. He says it is the policy of continuing the salary of the Speaker on an equality with that of the President and Vice-President. I so understood the Senator. Did he not make that statement?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I did not say it was necessary, but I said a custom had grown up, and the same reason that was given for an appropriation for the increase of the salary of the President of the United States applies to the Vice-President and Speaker.

Mr. FULTON. I did not quote the Senator's language exactly. I do not think I was very wide of expressing his meaning. Certainly I had no disposition to misquote the Senator. I only wished to suggest the question for the purpose of saying that if the dignity of the office be taken into consideration and the salary is to be measured according to that—and it should be—then I think that the salary of the Vice-President of the United States should also be higher than that of the Speaker or that of any other officer excepting only the President. The Vice-President is elected by the people, as is the President; he comes from the whole body of the country. The Speaker of the House is merely the officer of the Members of that House; he is simply the selection of the Members of the House. He is not the selection of the country at large; he does not represent the country at large in any comprehensive sense, as does the Vice-President. The Vice-President is the next officer in the country to the President himself; the next highest official to the Chief Executive, and I think it must be understood that it will cost him more to live in his official life in order to maintain the dignity of his office and position than it will a man occupying a less conspicuous official position. Therefore I think there is every reason why the salary of the Vice-President should be increased very considerably over what it is at the present time. There are many reasons why his salary should be in excess of that of the Speaker.

But I am not now discussing the question whether or not the Speaker should have a salary of $20,000; I am simply discussing the pending point of order. It seems to me it is well taken. I repeat, if legislation of this character can be carried in a general appropriation bill, there is no legislation that may not be so carried.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have upon the statute book at the present time a law fixing the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives; we also have a general law fixing the salary of the President of the United States and a general statute fixing the salaries of the different federal judges. It is proposed by simply increasing the salary here to dispense with those provisions of the statute and to change the general statutory law through the means of an appropriation measure. That statement of itself ought to be sufficient and efficient to satisfy anyone that this is general legislation; that it is designed to cover the subject-matter which general legislation should cover, and that it is covering that subject-matter.

The provision against which I raise the point of order reads as follows:

> Provided, That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

If it was not put in there for the purpose of fixing in a statutory form the salary of the Speaker by general legislation, it would not be necessary to have it there at all; but it must be there and take the form of general legislation and cover the subject-matter the same as general legislation would in order to make effective this appropriation which we are attempting to make.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] has suggested that all the different parts of the rules or of a law must be construed together. That is true. But why are they construed together? For what purpose? Certainly not for the purpose of annihilating or rendering inoperative a specific provision of a rule or of a statute.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the Senator permit me, right there?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The point the Senator makes, I think, is well taken. If this amendment is held to be subject to the point of order, then what does Rule XVI, subdivision 1, mean when it says:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill * * * unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee.

It is conceded that this is an item in the bill, that there is an effort to increase the item, and that it has been reported from two standing committees. If that is not in order, does not it have the effect of absolutely abolishing this particular rule? I agree with the Senator that it is general legislation. I believe that every single increase of salary in this bill is legislation. We have to legislate or the salary would remain as it was in the previous bill. We have to change it, and we can only change it by legislation. This subdivision 1 of Rule XVI applies particularly to appropriation bills and provides a way by which we can increase items in an appropriation bill by first securing a report from a standing committee of the Senate. It either means that or it does not mean anything and ought not to be in the rules.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. ALDRICH. I did not intend to interrupt the Senator, but I wish to make some answer to the suggestions made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. BORAH. I am willing to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho yields to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I wish to express my dissent from the doctrine laid down by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY] that an increase in the appropriation of an item in the appropriation bill made under direction of a standing committee of the Senate is general legislation. If it is general legislation, then we might as well stop making appropriations for the support of the Government.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HEMENWAY. I want some Senator, if he will, to define the difference between "general legislation" and "legislation."

Mr. ALDRICH. That is very easy to do. Changing the salary of a clerk of the United States or of a clerk in a department is certainly not general legislation, and never has been construed to be so in any ruling that has ever been made in the Senate within my recollection.

Mr. WARREN. That applies to but one man.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Then it is merely legislation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Oh, no. "General legislation" is a change of law by a provision which is general in its scope and effect.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I understand the distinction which the Senator is trying to make.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is a distinction which has been made by the Senate from time immemorial.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It has been made by the Senate from time immemorial, and I want it made to-day, else this rule is absolutely of no value.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ALDRICH. I supposed that I was occupying the floor in my own right.

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said that he yielded to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] for a suggestion.

Mr. ALDRICH. My idea was that I was occupying the floor in my own right.

Mr. FULTON. If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I wish to ask the Senator from Rhode Island if a statute fixing the salary of an officer—the President of the United States, the Vice-President, or the Speaker of the House—is not a general law?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is nothing known to the statutes or the rules of the Senate about a general law. I never heard the phrase used.

Mr. FULTON. There are general laws and special laws. A law granting a pension to John Smith would be a special law——

Mr. ALDRICH. I will, for the purpose of the Senator's argument, admit that there is such a thing as a general law.

Mr. FULTON. Very well. Then, if we change a general law, is that not general legislation?

Mr. ALDRICH. I beg the Senator's pardon. It is not necessarily so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I undertake to say, without fear of successful contradiction, that where a general law fixes the salary of an officer, any change in that law results in general legislation or any legislation which changes it is general legislation.

I was going to say, when my attention was diverted by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], that while these statutes or rules are construed as a whole, they are construed with the idea of upholding and making effective every part and parcel of the law or rule rather than to render inoperative any particular provision of it. In my judgment, a careful reading of the first provision of Rule XVI, upon which the Senator from Indiana relies, will disclose that it does not relate to the same subject-matter at all which is being considered and treated under section 3. That section reads:

3. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

The object of that provision was to prevent general legislation in an appropriation bill as a whole, and under section 3 we have not the right to have general legislation. The other section says:

And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The rule continues:

Or unless—

Mr. BORAH. It continues—

or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

You can not increase an appropriation or an item of appropriation without those conditions; but you can not have new legislation under any circumstances——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me suggest to the Senator that in the last provision——

Mr. BORAH. I mean general legislation.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The rule reads:

Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate.

Now, in this instance, the Finance Committee move this amendment; it is referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and they report it favorably. Does not that bring it within this rule?

Mr. BORAH. If the Senator will pardon me, that is increasing an item.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. But the portion of this bill to which I object is that creating a new salary—a different salary.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I think the Senator, when he properly construes section 3 of this rule, will find that it applies to general legislation, as the term is usually accepted—legislation that affects the general public, legislation of a general character, not the fixing of a salary in this bill or any of these salaries; yet I admit right along you can not change salaries without legislating, but that is not general legislation such as is contemplated by the third clause of Rule XVI of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this is general legislation. It fixes the question of salary for a number of officers of the Government. It is a matter of general interest to the general public, and there can not be any subject concerning which we are more interested than the question of controlling the expense in reference to the salaries of the officers whose salaries the people must pay.

It is in every sense general legislation, and the viciousness of its being in this bill, if I may use the term, is disclosed here this afternoon when we find that there are scarcely two Senators who agree as to what these changes should be. It is a subject which should come in in an appropriate and orderly way by general legislation that it may be appropriately discussed and properly considered.

I raised this point of order for two reasons. In the first place, if there is anything that is solemnly mysterious to a new member of this body it is an appropriation bill. It is almost impossible, with the opportunity which we have to analyze it, to know what is going on.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will not limit that remark to new members.

Mr. BORAH. I have to do that out of common courtesy and out of the high regard I have for the older members of the Senate. I suppose, of course, that they are more familiar with these matters and can follow them better.

Mr. BACON. I will say to the Senator that, after fourteen years' service, appropriation bills, by reason of their complexity and the consolidation of different items of appropriation, are as much of a mystery to me to-day as they were the first day I entered the Chamber.

Mr. BORAH. That is, I feel, a high compliment, and I feel encouraged, notwithstanding I have not as yet been able to solve them. But there are features about appropriation bills with which we are primarily concerned, even if we have not been here for twenty-four hours. We want to know something about what we are doing, especially when we come to the question of changing the salaries of so many different officers.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I think the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension. Salaries are properly fixed in this bill. The change in the salaries of Members of Congress two years ago was made upon a similar bill. This is the bill that carries appropriations for salaries, and it is the proper bill upon which to change them.

Mr. BORAH. I will ask the Senator from Indiana if the salaries were fixed in an appropriation bill, whether anybody raised a point of order?

Mr. HEMENWAY. It was fought out in the House and in the Senate. I do not remember the points that were made, but the legislation was carried on the legislative, and so forth, appropriation bill, which is the proper place to carry it. It is the bill that appropriates for the salaries of officers of the various departments of the Government. We raised the salaries of Cabinet officers on this bill. We have on this bill raised the salary of the President a number of times and also provided for his traveling expenses. It is the proper place for such matters.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this has become a more interesting subject since the deficit of this Government is increasing so rapidly and is entitled to more consideration.

The second reason why I raised the point of order is that I am utterly and absolutely opposed to increasing salaries. I am not going to trespass upon the time of the Senate to state my reasons. I am satisfied to state it as a fact and let it remain in the RECORD, but I do think that it is a matter of a great deal of importance. It is a question which comes with each recurring session of Congress. It is a subject-matter with which we have to deal almost every session while we are here. It is a matter in which we are not only interested, but the people generally are interested. It is a subject which is entitled to discussion at length and consideration at length; and although it may have been a custom to put these salary increases in the appropriation bill and carry them through in that way, it is time that the custom had an end, and that such matters of general importance and of general legislation should come in in an appropriate way where we can consider them and discuss them.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Will the Senator permit me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This bill is made up for the particular purpose of fixing salaries.

Mr. TILLMAN. According to existing law.

Mr. HEMENWAY. It is a bill made up of salaries.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am aware that the bill is made up for the purpose of appropriating for salaries, but I am not aware that it is made up for the purpose of changing salaries.

Mr. HEMENWAY. If the Senator will look over the appropriation bills that have passed the two Houses of Congress, he will find that many, many changes and salary increases have been made in every bill. If that were not true, we could simply pass one bill. We would not have to take each item up at the succeeding Congresses. The salaries of the officers of the various departments of the Government have been fixed from time to time upon this bill, and are changed from time to time upon this bill.

The President and the heads of the departments in every estimate they send down to Congress recommend changes of salary and increases of salary, and they are all taken up and determined upon in this bill. It is the proper place for them to be taken up and determined, and the Senator, I think, is mistaken when he urges that it ought not to be done, because it is the only bill provided by the rules of the House and the Senate for the consideration of the question of salaries of the officers of the executive departments in the city of Washington.

Mr. McLAURIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. McLAURIN. Could not a bill be introduced fixing the salaries of these officers? The Senator from Indiana says this is the only bill on which it can be done. Could not a separate bill be introduced?

Mr. HEMENWAY. Beyond question, the Senator could introduce any bill he wanted to.

Mr. McLAURIN. Has not a bill been introduced to fix the salary of the President of the United States, and has it not been referred to a committee?

Mr. HEMENWAY. The bill was introduced, referred to the Committee on Finance, reported by the Committee on Finance favorably, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. After it came to us from the Committee on Finance the Committee on Appropriations took it up for consideration and determined to put it in this bill, following exactly, if the Senator will permit me, the recommendation of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McLAURIN. I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if the bill that had been referred to the Committee on Finance and reported favorably by the Committee on Finance was ever referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the bill was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with the recommendation that it be incorporated in this appropriation bill. As the Senator knows, legislation affecting the salary of the President of the United States must be had before the 4th of March, if it is to be had at all.

Mr. McLAURIN. Has that bill ever been acted upon by the Senate?

Mr. WARREN. It has been acted upon in this way: It came to the Senate from the Finance Committee and was then, at their request, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, was acted on by that committee, and as inserted here is recommended by the Finance Committee.

Mr. McLAURIN. Then, as I understand, Mr. President, the bill which originally proposed to increase the salary of the President of the United States, introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Finance, was reported back to the Senate, then referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and came out as an amendment to an appropriation bill instead of as a separate bill.

Mr. WARREN. It was referred as a proposed amendment, and it came to us in that way.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I am not rising to oppose this bill by any argument. I want to say that the work of the Committee on Finance on this particular bill was to recommend an increase in the salaries of the President, the Vice-President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. It was limited to that. There was no recommendation made by that committee for the $5,000 allowance proposed to be made to the Speaker and to the Vice-President. The committee did, upon my motion, add to the appropriation for the President with the idea that there should be no further allowance than the straight salary. That was done because, as is known, in a previous bill we provided an appropriation of $25,000 for presumed traveling expenses, which did not exist and never did exist, for the present incumbent of the White House.

Mr. WARREN. The item now at issue is one of salary alone, and upon that I understand the Senator did agree with me.

Mr. MONEY. Exactly.

Mr. WARREN. That is, the Committee on Finance reported it as an amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, that it might go into the bill.

Mr. MONEY. That is true; but I want to make it clear that the Committee on Finance did not recommend the other item of $5,000 allowance for carriages, and so forth.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to submit another remark. If this bill should carry the appropriation just as it does carry it without the proviso to which we raise the objection, would not the Speaker be bound by the general law which now prevails upon the statute book with reference to the salary which he should draw? Can you change that general law except by general legislation?

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, there are two classes of amendments which can properly be made to general appropriation bills, and there is one class of amendments that can not be made at any time. Amendments in the nature of general legislation are not in order upon a general appropriation bill. That is the inflexible rule of the Senate, which has been interpreted in various ways by the Senate itself. I have seen provisions very wide in their application declared by the Senate itself to be in order upon general appropriation bills. There have been many instances of that kind in the history of the Senate.

There is another class of amendments to general appropriation bills which increase appropriations for particular items in the bill above the amount in the bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives. Such amendments are in order if, among other things, they are reported from a standing committee of the Senate, and that is precisely what has been done in the case of the recommendation for the increase in the salary of the President and Vice-President and other officers.

If it is not in order to increase an item in this general appropriation bill in the form and in the maner which I have suggested, then no amendment in the nature of an increase can be made except by unanimous consent. It practically destroys the power of the Senate to amend a general appropriation bill if we are bound to take the bill precisely as it comes to us from the House of Representatives and pass it without change.

That construction has never been put upon the rules, and I would suggest that any such construction is absurd. You can not change a bill in any of its features in the way of increasing an appropriation if it can not be done, under the rules, upon the approval of a standing committee of the Senate.

For instance here is an item:

For Chaplain of the House, $1,200.

Does the Senator mean to say that we can not increase the salary of the Chaplain of the House of Representatives, provided a standing committee of the Senate reports in favor of it, to $1,300 or $1,250? And yet it might be a change in the law, if you please.

The House of Representatives has a rule which provides that no amendment which changes existing law shall be in order. That is not the rule of the Senate. The rule of the Senate is something entirely different from that.

The question whether or not these salaries should be raised as a matter of public policy in view of the revenues of the Government, or whether the salary of the President is too high or too low, has nothing to do with this question of the rule.

I hope the Senate will not adopt any precedent that will put it out of their power to amend any bill making general appropriations for the Government which comes from the House of Representatives.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. Would the Senator let me point out a possible distinction between the case cited by him and the one under discussion?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. So far as I know, Mr. President, there is no law and no requirement that the salary of the Chaplain of the House of Representatives shall be fixed by law, but there is a requirement of the Constitution that the salaries of the Members of the House of Representatives shall be fixed by law. I call the Senator's attention to section 6 of the first article of the Constitution of the United States:

The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services, to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States.

In that connection I invite the Senator's attention to the subsequent clause of the Constitution, that—

No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

There are two requirements in the case of Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate: First, that their compensation shall be ascertained—that is, fixed by statute—and, second, that they shall be paid by an appropriation out of the Public Treasury. There is no such requirement as that, so far as I know, with reference to the Chaplain of the House.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, we are not discussing the question as to what the compensation of Members of the Senate or the House of Representatives should be generally, and we are not discussing the question as to the constitutional requirements in that direction. We are discussing what amendments are in order under the standing rules, and that is the sole question which is now before the Senate.

The question is whether we shall put such a construction upon this rule as would practically prevent the Senate from making any amendments to any general appropriation bill. That was never the purpose of the rule, and it has never been construed by the Senate at any time in that way.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield further to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. The purpose of my reading the extract from the Constitution was to invite the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the fact, as I believe it to be, that the Constitution requires that there should be a general law ascertaining the compensation of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and that then it should be appropriated for. I do not mean to say, of course, that the Constitution says that there should be two kinds of bills, for an appropriation bill is a general bill, but the Constitution requires general legislation on the subject of the compensation of Senators and Representatives.

I submit that under this subdivision of Rule XVI of the Senate the fixing of the compensation of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who is a Member of that body and its presiding officer, is general legislation within the meaning of the Constitution and within the meaning of this rule, and that to change it by an appropriation bill would be contrary to this subdivision of Rule XVI.

Mr. ALDRICH. Whether or not the Constitution required that we should fix the salary of Senators and Members, no money could be paid out of the Public Treasury unless appropriated by law for those purposes, and that applies equally to the Chaplain of the House of Representatives and to the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives. Of course the Constitution does not require that we should fix the salary of the Chaplain of the House. Perhaps it had no Chaplain at the time the Constitution was adopted. But it must be fixed by law, and no money can be paid out of the Treasury of the United States except upon appropriations made by law. That is in the Constitution, too, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do.

Mr. FULTON. The Senator from Rhode Island has said several times that the construction of this rule for which he contends has been the uniform construction, and he is kind enough to suggest to those who have taken a different view from himself that any other construction is absurd. Of course that ought to be the end of the argument. But I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the distinguished senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] made the statement on the floor here a while ago that it had been decided both ways, and, as I understood him, to express his view that it is general legislation and obnoxious to the rule. The distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who has served here a great many years, tells me it has been decided both ways. Now, of course, when it was decided against the contention of the Senator from Rhode Island I suppose it was absurd.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is undoubtedly true that the rules of the Senate have been construed in various ways by this body. I think there is no Member of this body who has been here for many years who has not seen the Senate repeatedly change its interpretation of the rules according to the wishes of the majority at the time being. But I do insist that unless there has been some great emergency that required, in the opinion of the Senate, that the rule should be differently interpreted the interpretation I have given to the rule has been uniformly followed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to ask the Senator if there is not a difference between the two appropriations, the one appropriating for salaries fixed by law, a general law, and the one changing an item in an appropriation bill which simply carries an item year after year. If that is true, then does not an amendment which changes the salary provided by general law become itself a general act, and is it not general legislation?

Mr. ALDRICH. No; it is not general legislation unless it is general in its scope, and the mere changing of an appropriation for a single salary for a single year is not general legislation and has never been so construed to my knowledge. It is taken out by the rule itself.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield further to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. Then, if the salary is changed in this bill——

Mr. ALDRICH. It is changed only for the year.

Mr. CURTIS. Changed only for the year?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is all.

Mr. CURTIS. Does that not change the general law for the year?

Mr. ALDRICH. It does not; not necessarily.

Mr. KEAN. It changes the compensation.

Mr. ALDRICH. It changes the compensation for one year.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. McLAURIN. If the Senator will allow me, not to interrupt the Senator from Kansas——

Mr. CURTIS. I want the item read.

Mr. McLAURIN. It provides:

That the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after March 3, 1909, shall be $20,000 per annum.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the committee, perhaps, were somewhat unfortunate in the language which they used. I suggest to the acting chairman of the subcommittee that the item should be changed to read as follows:

Provided, That of the amount herein appropriated $20,000 may be used to pay the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives——

Mr. McLAURIN. From what is the Senator reading?

Mr. ALDRICH. Which is a mere limitation upon this appropriation and applies for only one year.

Mr. McLAURIN. But that is not the way it reads in the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. No.

Mr. CURTIS. The reason I asked the question was because of the language of the present bill, and I thank the Senator from Mississippi for reading it, because I want it to go into the RECORD.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, the real question before the Senate is not new or exceedingly difficult. It takes on quite an importance in connection with the prominent officials whose salaries are involved at this time. I say it is not new. It has not been certainly six months since it was decided by the present occupant of the chair absolutely and squarely.

The Judiciary Committee authorized me, as a member of it, to present to the Senate the proposition to allow United States district judges $6 a day, in addition to their existing salary, with which to defray their expenses when away from home holding court in their several States. The Judiciary Committee recommended that increase in the compensation of the judges because it was compensation in the sense that it relieved the judge of the necessity of providing for his own personal expenses. When it was offered by direction of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] made the point that it was new legislation, providing a liability not otherwise existing; and upon consideration the Chair decided the point to be well taken, and the amendment went out, and went out properly. I thought possibly it would escape the objection, being so small in amount and so obviously just in principle. But the Senator from Illinois thought otherwise, and I had no complaint to make at the ruling of the Chair on that occasion.

The amendment was general and applied to all in the class to whom it purported to apply. A law is general if it applies to all persons in the class referred to, whether they are numerous or few.

There is but one President; there is but one Vice-President; there is but one Speaker of the House of Representatives; and the number of circuit judges now existing is fixed by law, and every one of those officers is embraced in the legislation proposed by this amendment. It is general, as general as it can be. There is no sort of phraseology which would make it more general or which would bring in a single more individual than is now provided for.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Arkansas a question?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I cheerfully yield.

Mr. WARREN. Was that an amendment which had been reported favorably by a committee?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Yes, sir; the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WARREN. And had it been accepted by the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It had been reported by the Judiciary Committee. But there was the difficulty—the member of the Committee on Appropriations then in charge of the appropriation bill declined to permit it to go on, and under this rule the Senate declined, and very properly declined, to accept it.

Now, it is useless to say that the Senate can not legislate on any particular subject-matter which, under the Constitution, is committed to it. It has disabled itself by certain rules. If that were not true the appropriations could be put in any sort of a bill and any sort of legislation could be put upon an appropriation bill. But the experience of the Senate has demonstrated the fact that the orderly dispatch of business requires that some things shall be considered on one occasion and other things shall be considered on other occasions, and disconnected from occasions of the first sort. It is a part of the legislative history of this Chamber that the two Houses disagreed about how certain election laws should be enforced or carried out. One House had the power to deny all appropriations unless certain changes were made that were agreeable to the majority in that House. It was absolutely within the power of one House of Congress to suspend the operation of the Government unless some limitation was imposed.

The rule of the Senate has been enforced, and there is less occasion for violating it now than ever. The integrity with which the rules of the Senate are observed by those in authority is of vast importance to the country and vast importance in maintaining the respect in which the people and the members of the Senate hold those who have a right to administer its affairs.

So far as the merits of this particular proposition are concerned, I do not know that I am very much opposed to doing in an orderly way what is attempted to be done. I think this is a manner of doing it which is not required by any exigency of which I am aware, and is a more expeditious way of disposing of it than, in my judgment, any exigency demands.

If there is a necessity for increasing the salary of the President or any other officer, let that proposition be submitted to the Senate, disassociated from other matters, allowing each proposition to stand upon its own merits.

I do not take much stock in the contention that the Senate could not do this or that or the other, or if it did that it would not be valid; but my little knowledge of the law and its limitations satisfies me that there is a distinction between the creation and fixing of a salary and the payment of it. Salaries are fixed for members of this body and for various other officers. Suppose it should turn out late in the session that the President had vetoed an appropriation bill, so that there would be no funds available for our pay. We would not lose the money. The Government would owe us that much. We would know exactly to a cent what it would be, and it would be provided for in subsequent legislation.

So it is in the case of the President. His salary is fixed by one law, or, if it were not for this rule, it might be in this same law, and then its payment is provided for. But the Senate in the exercise of its authority has provided that there shall be a separation of the matter of appropriation from the question of general legislation. I think it was wisely done. I see no occasion now for introducing another rule.

I do not believe there is a member of this body who would interpose obstruction to any proposition to increase the President's salary, but there is no reason why it should be hitched onto one of the appropriation bills which must necessarily go through and behind which a large group of influences always urges its passage.

There is a reason also for this rule.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention to the fact that these items are all single, each by itself, and probably a way could be found to get them before the Senate to vote on them separately? Now, as to some of them, the legislation might be proper at any time, and we could delay, but I suppose the Senator understands that so far as the President is concerned we must act before the 4th of March or it can not apply for the next four years.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I understand that perfectly well.

Mr. WARREN. And at this late time——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It is not late. It is just the beginning of the session.

Mr. WARREN. It may be the beginning of the session, but if the Senator will count the days he will find that there are not many more between now and adjournment.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It would not take this body many days to dispose of a single proposition of this kind.

Mr. WARREN. That is very true, but it has to be acted upon elsewhere.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If it is the purpose to provide against difficulties elsewhere, I see why the item was put in this bill. You are not willing to let it stand on its own merits.

Mr. WARREN. It stands upon its own merits if there is an opportunity to vote on it separately.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then it is because of some reason that applies elsewhere. There is no disposition here to obstruct a bill to increase the salary of the President. If the Senator has knowledge of difficulties, it must be knowledge of what may transpire elsewhere.

The rule provides that an existing item can not be increased——

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Cheerfully.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator think any member of this body would vote differently upon a proposition to increase the President's salary on this bill than he would on any other bill?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That question, in my judgment, is not submitted at this time. I can tell you what I will do. I will vote for any reasonable increase in the President's salary, but the integrity of the rules of the Senate is what we are insisting upon now. We want them enforced in cases where they operate unpopularly as well as where they bring about results that are desired. That is the question I am discussing, and it is to that that I commit myself. In the light of the precedents in the Senate the point of order should be sustained; and since I have been interrogated, I express my willingness, on some proper occasion and in the proper connection, to vote for any reasonable increase in the President's salary that anyone may suggest.

So far as concerns the contention that this item is in order because it is recommended by a committee, if that were literally true then the procedure would be unconstitutional, because it would give a preference, and not only a preference, but an absolute precedence, in the right of consideration to such measures as were proposed by committees. If it is a proper matter of legislation, any Senator ought to have a right to present it and to take the judgment of the Senate upon it. If the construction contended for by Senators is correct, that it is right when offered by a committee and wrong when offered by an individual Senator, it creates a distinction that ought not to exist, and under the Constitution has no warrant.

If it relates to an unascertained liability, the presumption is that members of the committee having in charge that particular branch of governmental expenditure know more about it than other Senators; and in the consideration of the bill the carefully worked-out estimates of the department should not be interfered with unless there is behind it something more than the individual judgment of a single Senator. That will yield to the committee in the enactment of laws of this kind all of the precedence to which, in my judgment, they are entitled.

But the enforcement of the rule is what I am insisting upon on this occasion. I think, as I have already said, that the question was decided correctly when it was decided within the last six months. I think to give the rule the broad construction contended for by some Senators this evening would be to impart to members of the committee authority which individual Senators can not exercise.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, it seems to me we ought to apply in this case the rule which should apply in the construction of statutes; and that is, if possible, so to construe the rule that we can give force and effect to all its parts.

Now, to my mind, while the first paragraph of the rule lays down one rule and the third paragraph another rule, yet if we bear in mind the difference that there is between appropriations, we can see the application of the rule. There are two classes of appropriations. One class of appropriations is in the nature of a law, like that of a salary. When salaries are fixed for executive officers, that is a law—a law fixing the salary. But we have another class of appropriations that are not a matter of law. Take, for instance, an appropriation for rivers and harbors. There is no law at all on that subject. You have in the bill an appropriation of so much to put a dam on a certain river or to construct a canal. If you increase the appropriation you do not change the law in any respect or manner. It is not involved.

To give force and effect to this rule I would construe it in this way: That where an appropriation is not in the nature of a law, as is the case of an appropriation item in the river and harbor bill, or for any other species of public work, then, and in that case, if it is a mere naked appropriation, increasing it does not involve a change in the law, and the first paragraph of the rule applies. But where the appropriation is of the other character, as in the case of a salary appertaining to a public office, when an increase or change in the appropriation practically involves a change in existing law, then the third paragraph of the rule applies; and if we increase it and enlarge it beyond what is the existing law, it is a matter of general legislation.

The law fixing the salaries of these different officers is a general law. It is in no sense a special law, and when we seek by an appropriation to change that, it is a matter of general legislation, and the third paragraph of the rule applies. So in all these cases the first point to consider is the character of the appropriation. Is it an appropriation, a naked appropriation, that does not involve a change of law? If that is the case, then the first paragraph of the rule applies, and we have a right to change it or increase it. But if the increase in appropriations involves new legislation, a change in existing law, then the third paragraph of the rule applies, and we have no right to accept the amendment if we are going to live up to our rules.

Mr. PILES. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question, if he will permit me.

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I am seeking for all the light I can gain on the construction of the rule, because I myself have some matters that I desire to look up. I should like to get the Senator's view of Rule XVI, subdivision 1. Subdivision 1 of that rule says:

> No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law or treaty stipulation or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

That act may be general law. What will you do with——

Mr. NELSON. The Senator understands we are executing a law.

Mr. PILES. I know.

Mr. NELSON. Take, for instance, a case where——

Mr. PILES. One moment.

Mr. NELSON. Hold on.

Mr. PILES. I want the Senator to understand me. There can be no general law until it has passed both branches of Congress. That is existing law. But subdivision 1 says that where an act—and that act of course may be very general—has passed this body it may be put on an appropriation bill in order that it may thereby pass the House of Representatives. Now, I should like to have the Senator explain that.

Mr. NELSON. There is no occasion to explain it in this instance, because, as a matter of fact, we have not passed any bill on this subject.

Mr. PILES. Oh, no; I am not speaking of that.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I will take this case as illustrating the clause of the rule to which the Senator from Washington calls attention. Suppose that before this bill had come to us the Congress had passed a law increasing the salary of an official, increasing the salary, we will say, of the Speaker of the House. Then it would become necessary in order to carry that out for the Committee on Appropriations to increase the item.

Mr. NELSON. That would come under the first paragraph of the rule.

Mr. FULTON. It would be perfectly proper to do that on the floor.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is not the case cited by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. PILES. Not at all.

Mr. ALDRICH. Suppose the Senate passes a law——

Mr. FULTON. The Senate can not pass a law.

Mr. ALDRICH. Or a bill or whatever the Senator, who seems disposed to be technical, may wish to call it, increasing the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives to $20,000, would this amendment then be in order?

Mr. FULTON. I think it might be in order in a case of that kind.

Mr. ALDRICH. Would not that be general legislation?

Mr. FULTON. No, sir; that would not be. The rule is, you can not incorporate general legislation on an appropriation bill, but if by general legislation you have changed a general law, or by separate legislation you have changed a general law, then you may provide for carrying that out in an appropriation bill or may change the item, and do it without violation of the rule.

Mr. McLAURIN and Mr. PILES addressed the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. PILES. I understood that the Senator from Minnesota had concluded his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I desire to answer the query of the Senator from Rhode Island by saying that the first clause of Rule XVI, provides for the case of which he speaks, and that is to say:

> And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

There is a provision for that case, but that has nothing to do with——

Mr. HEMENWAY. Read on further from the same rule.

Mr. McLAURIN (reading)—

> Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the departments.

That does not touch this case at all.

Mr. LODGE. The committee report does.

Mr. McLAURIN. Oh, no; that does not touch this case at all. The objection to this is that it proposes general legislation. It is a very different proposition from increasing an item of appropriation. The Senator from Indiana assumes all the time and commits everybody, so far as he can commit them, to the assumption that this is merely and admittedly an increase of an item of appropriation. That is not the objection of the Senator from Idaho. The objection of the Senator from Idaho is to the enactment of a law fixing the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives after the 3d of next March. That is obnoxious to the third clause, which says that no amendment of that kind shall be received.

Now, in section 6 of the first article of the Constitution, to which the Senator from Texas referred, it is provided that the compensation of Senators and Representatives shall be ascertained by law. Is that a general law? If it is, any law that repeals or changes or alters it must be a general law; and it is admitted by the Senator from Indiana, unless he is going to withdraw that admission, that this is general legislation.

I beg pardon of the Senator from Minnesota for intruding thus far upon his time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am unwilling to take up the time of the Senate any further on this matter, except simply to add that I think the criterion in this case should be whether the increase sought is in the nature of general legislation or not.

The case referred to by the Senator from Washington is quite familiar. For instance, at the last session of Congress we first passed a general public building bill. Then, after that, we passed an appropriation bill to carry it out. They were distinct measures, and our appropriation bill to carry out the other bill that we had already passed was perfectly in order under our rule.

So there is a class of appropriations, such as I have already referred to, which we make in the matter of the improvement of rivers and harbors. There is no law providing for them in advance. There is no direct law on the subject. They are based wholly on the estimates of the engineers of the War Department and upon the opinions of the respective committees. In an appropriation of that kind, if the House appropriates $100,000 for a harbor at Savannah, and it comes here to the Senate and we see fit to increase it, it is not new legislation.

We are not modifying any existing law. New legislation means a change in the old legislation, and we are not in a case of that kind making any change. But when we come to the matter of salaries fixed by law, in whatever form they may be fixed by general law, every time we change those salaries it is a matter of general legislation. If the law creating the salaries is not private legislation, if it is general legislation, then the law changing that law must of necessity be general legislation.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I am not going to discuss the question of increasing the salary of the Speaker, because that question is not now up for discussion. I wish, however, to give my views on the rule as I understand it. I agree fully with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that every statute and every rule must be construed so as to make all the parts harmonize if possible. As I understand Rule XVI there are two limitations, if not three, contained in the first subdivision thereof. First:

> And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill unless recommended by a standing or select committee.

And no new items shall be added to the bill unless either the bill itself proposes to carry out "existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate" at the session at which the amendment is offered.

As I said to the Senator from Minnesota, the word "act" is to be construed as having relation to a bill, and the term as there used includes general legislation. As I look at this rule, as a whole, it is perfectly clear to me that it was the intention of the Senate that amendments of the character now under consideration might be made to an appropriation bill, subject to the limitations therein contained. Subdivision 2, among other things, provides:

> All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the committee.

What is the use of having that reference, what is the use of stating in subdivision 1 that there may be added to a general appropriation bill an act or bill previously passed at the same session of Congress, if it was intended to exclude therefrom general legislation under all circumstances?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he considers the change of a salary to be general legislation?

Mr. PILES. If I concluded that it did, that would not change my construction of the rule one way or the other.

Mr. BORAH. I speak respectfully, of course, but that does not answer my question.

Mr. PILES. I am free to confess that I am not sure whether it is general legislation or not.

Mr. BORAH. If it is general legislation, then why was clause 3 put in there at all?

Mr. PILES. I was about to read subdivision 3. It was incorporated in order to prevent general legislation being passed in an appropriation bill of this character unless falling within the provisions of subdivisions 1 and 2. I think that subdivision 3 should read——

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Washington yield to me for a question?

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Is it not true that if you take subdivisions 1 and 2, taking your very argument, the provisions of those two subdivisions have not been complied with, regardless of subdivision 3? Under them such legislation could not be offered to an appropriation bill, and it would not be necessary to have subdivision 3 to prevent it.

Mr. PILES. That is not involved in this proposition at all. Suppose subdivision 3 were not in this rule——

Mr. CLAY. If subdivision 3 was not in the rule——

Mr. PILES. There would not be any reference to general legislation.

Mr. CLAY. That is true. If subdivision 3 was not in the rule then there would be nothing to prevent general legislation being offered to an appropriation bill.

Mr. PILES. Does the Senator from Georgia wish to have the rule construed so that no amendment proposing general legislation may be inserted in an appropriation bill, although the amendment may be in the nature of a bill which has passed the Senate?

Mr. CLAY. There are many items in an appropriation bill that do not depend upon existing law. There are items fixing the salaries of our clerks. Every appropriation bill fixes those salaries. You can increase them if you want to do so upon the appropriation bill, because there is no general law fixing their salaries. You can add an item to the bill for that purpose; but if there is a general statute fixing what shall be the salary attached to official positions, then to change that general law comes in conflict with subdivision 3. I do not think that the appropriation for the salary of the Speaker is personal. It is official. It applies to that office and not to the person.

Mr. PILES. In answering the Senator, let me ask him this: Suppose the Senate had passed a bill providing for an increase of the salary of the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and that bill had not passed the House, but had been referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and that committee had recommended that the increase be incorporated in this bill; should that, under the Senator's view, be excluded as general legislation under the provisions of Rule XVI?

Mr. CLAY. I do not think that would change the rule. The fact that the Senate passes a bill fixing the salary of the Speaker or the Vice-President or the judiciary does not make it law. If the Senate and House should pass a bill changing the salary, then we could in the appropriation bill make the salary comply with the law.

Mr. PILES. But the Senator has not answered my question. If the bill had passed this body, conceding it to be general legislation, could it be incorporated in this bill?

Mr. CLAY. I do not think so.

Mr. PILES. Then, what is the meaning of subdivision 1?

Mr. CLAY. Subdivision 1 simply means that where there are items you propose to add to an appropriation bill, which do not change or vary the general law, you can increase those items, if you want to do so.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, the Senator's contention would destroy the cardinal rule of statutory construction, because every word in a statute must be given full force and effect where it is possible for the court to do so.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. PILES. In just a moment. When the Senate promulgated this rule providing that there might be incorporated in a general appropriation bill an act, or bill, more properly speaking, which had previously passed the Senate, it meant that the words which it employed should have significance and effect. By construing subdivision 3, in the light of the decisions of the courts, so that effect shall, if possible, be accorded to every word and every part thereof in connection with the whole, so as to make all the parts harmonize when possible and give meaning to each, it is perfectly clear, to my mind, that general legislation may be included in the general appropriation bills subject to the limitations imposed by the rule. This construction harmonizes each and every part of the rule. Any other construction would make meaningless important provisions therein contained.

Now I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. If the rule as stated by the Senator is correct, as it is, with reference to the interpretation of statutes, that they shall be given binding force and effect, then I ask again what becomes of subdivision 3, which says that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill."

Mr. PILES. I answered that as I think any judge would answer it sitting upon the bench. I construe subdivisions 1, 2, and 3 so as to stand harmoniously together; that is to say, any amendment which proposes general legislation may be included in the bill which meets the requirements of the rule.

Mr. BORAH. That would be all right if subdivision 3 said that; but subdivision 3 says that no general legislation shall be had. Does not that modify subdivisions 1 and 2?

Mr. PILES. May I ask the Senator whether, under the well-known rule of both statutory and constitutional construction, if this rule shall be construed as I have contended, saying in subdivision 3, as I think the rule as a whole was intended, "that no general legislation shall be proposed except as hereinbefore provided," that would not bring subdivisions 1, 2, and 3 into perfect harmony.

I believe, Mr. President, that that is the correct construction of the rule.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, there can be very little question that if this is general legislation under the rule it is subject to a point of order. Therefore we are brought face to face with the proposition whether it is general legislation as is understood by Rule XVI. Every attorney will agree with me, no doubt, that in the construction of the words in a statute as well as a rule we go to the object of the rule or the statute itself in order to determine whether the words used should have a special or a general significance and as to whether they should be subject to expansion or contraction.

The words "general legislation" are used in this third subdivision. What does "general legislation" mean? In order to get at the meaning of it we have got to go back and ascertain the object of the rule. What was the object of subdivision 3 of the rule? There are Senators possibly here to-day who were here before that rule was adopted. I do not know the date of its adoption. If I understand correctly, the rule was adopted to reach a certain condition, rather the abuse of legislation in attempting to attach all kinds of general legislation to appropriation bills. The result of that was that we had our appropriation bills clogged up with thousands of other things, and we wanted some rule to keep out the general legislation, so that we might deal with those bills by themselves and cut clear from any other proposition. Therefore we passed this rule that there could be no general legislation on an appropriation bill and that certain other legislation could not be attached to such a bill.

Now, what is the meaning of "general legislation?" Those who adopted the rule had in their mind at that time legislation of the most general character, and not legislation that some might put in the category of special and others in the category of general legislation.

No man can place his finger upon the exact dividing line between general and special legislation. A bill affecting one man in a company will be special legislation. If it affects the whole company it may be special. If it affects the whole regiment it is less special and more general. If it affects the whole army it is general legislation.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. FRYE. I had the honor of drafting that rule myself; and the Senator is stating it correctly. It seems to me that under that rule it is impossible to declare that an increase in the salary of a clerk of the Senate (and there are 30 or 40 such increases in this bill) is general legislation within the meaning of subdivision 3.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is the view I have taken of it. I can not make myself believe that when the Senate adopted that rule it intended that you could not change upon the floor of the Senate a salary that was fixed in the bill, either by lowering it or by raising it, and that we would be perfectly helpless upon that subject; but I believe what was intended was to eliminate the question of general legislation from bills of this kind, so that the Senate may deal with that which is properly an appropriation bill and not bills which are not properly of that character; and that therefore the term "general legislation," as used in this rule, means legislation of a most general character and not of the kind that has been discussed by Senators on this floor.

While I am up, Mr. President, I want to express one sentiment. I believe that the salary of the President ought to be raised. It was raised in a certain way to $75,000 about a year and a half or two years ago—that is, the President was allowed $25,000 for traveling expenses. I presume the entire amount has been taken up. I believed at that time we should have made a general raise of salary to $75,000. I am doubtful if we are not going a little too rapidly in jumping within two years from fifty thousand to one hundred thousand. I myself would be in favor of fixing the salary at this time at $75,000 and not at $100,000. I mention this fact now simply that my pair may vote accordingly if I am not here. I would wipe out entirely the matter of $25,000 for traveling expenses.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I will take only a moment. While the question before the Senate is upon the construction of the rule, there are back of it some practical questions from which I think the Senate can not escape consideration.

There is a proposition in the bill to increase the salary of the President of the United States to $100,000. I believe that a large majority of the Senate think that the President's salary should be increased. If it is increased at all, it must be increased before the 4th of March next. It must be practically increased in this bill. I would suggest to Senators as the bill carries appropriations for creating new clerks of Senators and for increasing the pay of clerks already in existence it will not be, at least from my standpoint, a very pleasant thing to have the country understand that we are willing to increase the number of clerks to Senators and the salaries of clerks to Senators, but that we find a technicality, if you please, in the construction of the rule which prevents us from increasing the salary of the President of the United States.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in my opinion, in which I am confirmed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who drew the rule, the exceptions in the first clause are to take new items of appropriation and increases of appropriation under certain conditions out of the prohibition against general legislation. I believe that is the sound construction of the rule, and I have nothing to add to what the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has said. But I want to call this point to the attention of the Senate. If the fact that it was reported from a standing or select committee does not except it from general legislation, then the passage of a Senate resolution, which is in the same class, does not except it from general legislation.

Every one of the clerks who are provided for in that great amendment is now drawing his salary under a general law. Some have been left at the same salary. That whole amendment is subject to a point or order if the view is sustained that the first clause of the rule does not constitute exceptions. If we pass a general act, such as the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] has described, it goes through the Senate. It may be for light-houses; it may be for aids to navigation; anything you please. We pass those laws constantly. That fact makes the amendments in order, and it has always been accepted as making them in order on an appropriation bill, taking them out of the prohibition. If the report of a standing or select committee does not take them out of the prohibition, the other provisions do not take them out. They all stand on the same ground precisely.

If this rule is enforced, as I have never seen it enforced in the Senate, the bill will go out of the Senate as bare as a bone, without any amendment affecting salaries, and it will carry with it the pay of the clerks. They rest entirely on the fact that we passed a resolution in the Senate. It never has passed the House. We passed a resolution in the Senate creating them; that is all they rest on. If that does not take them out, as the report of a standing or select committee takes them out, they are open to the point of order, everything is open to the point of order, and that is a construction the Senate has never held.

I remember very well being overruled by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], in the chair when I made the point of order on a similar provision some years ago, and the matter was brought strongly to my attention at that time. I believe the first clause makes exceptions, and that the whole rule has to be construed together. It is late, I know, and the Senate is about to adjourn; but I wanted to say this much before we adjourn.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I think it is evident to the Senate that we will not be able to conclude the consideration of the bill to-day.

The real question underlying all of this debate is whether or not we will increase certain salaries. I have no fear myself but that there will be an opportunity for the Senate to express itself by voting upon each and every one of these proposed additions. I myself believe that we are entirely within the rule. I do not believe that this is general legislation. It is not, as I understand it. We have submitted the various questions that have arisen to the Chair heretofore and depended upon the decision of the Chair. I think those decisions have been generally in favor of such amendments; but I am willing to leave it entirely to the experience and good judgment of the Vice-President.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over until Monday, and I will ask leave to call it up immediately after the routine morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the pending bill shall lie over until Monday, the consideration of it to be resumed immediately after the close of the routine morning business. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. For the information of the Senate, I will state it is understood that no business will be transacted to-morrow, the day, after the hour of half-past 1, being devoted to eulogies, as the Senate has already voted that when we adjourn it will be until half-past 1.

Mr. LODGE. Will there be any morning business?

Mr. HALE. There will be no morning business.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before putting the question, the Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives.

Mr. OWEN. Very well.

CLARENCE FREDERICK CHAPMAN.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12499) for the relief of Clarence Frederick Chapman, United States Navy, and requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. DICK. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference asked, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed Mr. DICK, Mr. MARTIN, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. Pending that motion, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, January 16, 1909, at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 15, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPRESENTATIVE FROM CONNECTICUT.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I notice that on the roll call on yesterday, pages 943, 944 of the RECORD, that "LILLEY"—Mr. GEORGE L. LILLEY, of the State of Connecticut—was called as a Member of this House; which shows, of course, his name is on the House roll. Now, I want to ask the Speaker if he is any longer a Member of this House, having been sworn in as, and being now, governor of the State of Connecticut? I think his name ought not to be on the roll.

The SPEAKER. From the headlines of the newspapers the Chair has noticed some question as to whether Mr. LILLEY is governor of the State of Connecticut, but you can not always believe what you see in the newspapers. The Chair has no official information in the premises.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I desire to ask, Mr. Speaker, if Congressman or Governor LILLEY has sent notice to the Speaker that, being governor of Connecticut, he has abandoned his membership of this House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks a question that the Chair does not care to go into. Of course, if the House has official information that Representative LILLEY is in the enjoyment of the office, namely, governor of the State of Connecticut, why that would be a matter for the House to decide whether or no that is an office incompatible with the position of Representative in the House, and that would be a matter for the House to decide, and the Chair does not care to give any opinion in the premises upon a hypothetical case. So far as the Chair knows, the Chair is not aware of the question ever having arisen.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of considerable importance, and I would like to address myself to the question for a few moments, which is on the approval of the Journal, because his name appears in the Journal as a Member of this House. I say that he is not a Member of this House, and I have considerable information upon the fact. That is why I speak thus. It is a very unpleasant duty for me to perform. My relations with the gentleman are very pleasant. Now, if the Chair will hear me a few minutes I think I can show the Chair and this House why we should act in this matter, and act without much delay.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the gentleman should have the unanimous consent of the House to address the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I guess I can get that on this important matter; but this is a privileged question, questioning the constitutional right of Mr. LILLEY to be a Member of this House and my constitutional right to challenge it. It is a question of high privilege, and has been so decided by Speakers of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Journal is disposed of.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not want it disposed of until I am heard, Mr. Speaker, on this constitutional question. Other Members of the House may want to be heard. I make the statement that GEORGE L. LILLEY, a former Member of this House, as I am informed by men from Connecticut who voted for him, was elected last November governor of that State; and I have before me this morning the Hartford Courant of the 6th and 7th of this month, giving the proceedings of the legislature of Connecticut on the 6th instant, stating that he was then inaugurated, and also his inaugural address, and so on. One of these papers also contains the picture of the distinguished gentleman, which I recognize and so will the Speaker. Here are the papers, gentlemen. Now, then, it is well decided by the courts on the question of judicial notice——

Mr. PAYNE. Is this a question of the approval of the Journal?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has a question of privilege at all, it could be as well presented, the Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, by his rising to a question of privilege, or alleged privilege, without reference to the approval of the Journal, if the Journal is approved.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But, Mr. Speaker, the point is, the Journal states that he is a Member of this House, and I challenge that. He is not a Member of this House, and I do not want to vote to approve something that I know is not true—at least that I believe is not true.

The SPEAKER. The Journal makes no mention of the gentleman except that he did not answer.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now then, it is recorded——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the Journal makes no mention of the name of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does not the Journal record the vote taken yesterday—the vote I am alluding to? His name appears.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reads from the RECORD. The RECORD is one thing and the Journal is another.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand that, Mr. Speaker; but the Journal should record the vote, and the Journal, I dare say, will record the vote of Mr. LILLEY as a Member of this House and as "absent and not voting."

The SPEAKER. The Journal does not, the Chair is informed, record the name of the gentleman "not voting." It records only the yeas and nays and those answering "present."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The yeas and nays and those present and not voting and those absent and not voting will be recorded.

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the Journal does not do that, all right. In approving the Journal, I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. But it is not customary to dispose of questions of privilege not involved in the order of the House pending the approval of the Journal.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, then——

Mr. PAYNE. Is there objection to that? If there is any objection I will make that motion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the approval of the Journal?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If his name is recorded as being a Member of the House——

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman has been informed he is not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, all right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the Journal stands approved.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I send a privileged resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee sends the following resolution to the desk, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas GEORGE L. LILLEY, a citizen of the State of Connecticut, was duly elected and qualified a Member of the House of Representatives, Sixtieth Congress, from said State; and

Whereas said GEORGE L. LILLEY was thereafter, in the November election, 1908, elected and on January 6, 1909, duly qualified and entered upon the duties of governor of said State: Therefore be it

Resolved, That his name be stricken from the roll, and his seat in this House be, and is hereby, declared vacant.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is privileged.

Mr. PAYNE. I move, if it is in order at this time to make the motion, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for report to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the resolution of the gentleman from Tennessee be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, just a moment.

Mr. KEIFER. Committee on Elections.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Just a moment.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose that is not debatable?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I believe I have the floor to offer a privileged resolution, and it is privileged. Wait a moment. I have no desire——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will suspend for a moment. The rules are nearly silent, according to the Chair's recollection, as to debate upon such a motion. The Chair is informed that the precedents are that such a motion is debatable, in narrow limits, as shown in the precedents that have been made from time to time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have the floor; I can cut this matter off very short.

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. It seems that the Chair has the floor for just a minute. [Laughter.] It seems to the Chair that the gentleman from New York, making the motion to refer to the committee, if he desires to be recognized, will be entitled to recognition.

Mr. PAYNE. That is what I was suggesting.

The SPEAKER. Under the narrow limits of the language of the precedents, debate probably would not include any discussion of the merits of the proposition, but a discussion of the desirability of referring the resolution.

Mr. PAYNE. I desire to take the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. But will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee—how much time?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did the gentleman from New York get possession of the floor to make that motion anyhow, when the gentleman from Tennessee had the floor?

Mr. PAYNE. On a privileged motion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. How did he take the floor? The gentleman was up and in possession of the floor——

Mr. PAYNE. That did not give him the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri (continuing). And he was making a speech.

Mr. PAYNE. He made a motion; the Chair stated the motion to the House, and the gentleman from New York made a motion—a privileged one.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It seems to me the gentleman from New York "butted in" where he had no right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair need not state what the precedents are, but the Chair is satisfied that they are substantially uniform where a Member arises in his place and presents a resolution. After the resolution is presented the gentleman must have a second recognition, and between the two recognitions, a motion having intervened after the introduction of the resolution, following the precedents—and which the Chair deems to be the proper practice—the gentleman making the motion pending should be entitled to recognition——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman has yielded to me, although I am entitled——

The SPEAKER. The object being to enable the House to keep control of its business. The gentleman yields to the gentleman from Tennessee for five minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think I am entitled to the floor in my own right, but I will say what I have to say at this time in five minutes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, first and foremost, I feel personally distressed to make this motion, but let us see where we are drifting. Suppose the Speaker were to direct the Sergeant-at-Arms to go out and arrest and bring into this House its absent Members. He would have to go to the State of Connecticut and bring the governor of the State of Connecticut. Suppose a Senator were to die, and while the distinguished gentleman was here on the floor of this House acting as a Member he would have to go back to the State of Connecticut to appoint a Senator to fill the vacancy.

Again (and I just make this statement now to show you where we can land), suppose there was an impeachment proceeding in the Senate and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY] had voted against the impeachment, and a Connecticut Senator were to die, and Governor LILLEY should go back to Connecticut and appoint his successor. Whether he appointed, with the best of motives, the proper man or not, he would be accused of appointing a man to vote his way in the Senate on the question of impeachment, and especially if he did so vote.

Mr. Speaker, the position of governor of the State of Connecticut, or any other State, is wholly "incompatible" with the duties of a Member of Congress. Including congressional cases, there are several court decisions on this subject, one (Calloway v. Sturm, 1 Hiesk. Reports) from the State of Tennessee, that shed a great deal of light on the subject.

Ex-Postmaster-General Maynard, while a Member of Congress from Tennessee, was appointed to a supreme court judgeship in that State, and the court declared "he thereby vacated his office as a Member of Congress. I shall not quote fully from that authority, because I have not the time:

It is settled—

Said the court—

that on the acceptance and qualification of a person to a second office, incompatible with the one he is then holding, the first office is ipso facto vacated. It operates as an implied resignation—an absolute determination of the original office (citing 2 Hill, 93, and other cases).

There is a case from the State of South Carolina (State v. Buttz, 9 S. C., 156–186). Buttz was elected district attorney or solicitor and was later on elected a Member of Congress, and he came here and qualified as a Member of Congress, and under a quo warranto proceeding the supreme court of that State declared that he had thereby forfeited the office of district attorney or solicitor.

A city officer in New York was elected and qualified as a Member of this House, and the court held the city office thereby became vacated (76 N. Y. Rept., 509).

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do not take my time.

Mr. CAULFIELD. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I object to being interrupted.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the motion to refer, but to the resolution, and that he is out of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, well, it is a very serious matter, Mr. Speaker, and I am very glad that the Judiciary Committee is to get hold of it. That is a committee of great lawyers. Now, if the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The Chair being engaged in other matters, was not paying close attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was just citing some authorities.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will dispose of the point of order by stating that the gentleman from Tennessee knows what is in order, and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I was in order, Mr. Speaker, and I am trying to bring about order. Now, here is Congressman LILLEY, who may or may not, in fact, have notified Governor LILLEY that Congressman LILLEY has resigned; while neither has notified the Speaker that he has resigned. Now, what might occur in case we sent for Governor LILLEY to come here and help to attend to the business of this House? Suppose a law should be passed here by his, a deciding, vote? Do you not know that it might be attacked in the courts? Why do we run into such a dangerous condition without consideration? We know there are precedents where Members of the House have stated to the Speaker, by letter or otherwise, that they have resigned. There are other cases where they have not. But is the House to be held up for want of notice?

Mr. TOWNSEND. What provision of the Constitution has been violated in this case?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want the Judiciary Committee to pass on the question. I say it is a matter that goes to the very fundamental rights of this House and of Congress, omitting the rights of the people of the State of Connecticut. Now, Mr. Speaker, without more, and with the sincere desire that this great question be settled for all time by the Judiciary Committee and by this great body, I will yield the floor.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HIGGINS.]

Mr. HIGGINS. Mr. Speaker, I have listened, as I always do, with a great deal of attention to the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] who, I regret, is going to leave this body on the 4th of next March; and I only want to say that he is, as I understand it, entirely mistaken in the facts.

It is true that GEORGE L. LILLEY, formerly a Member of this House, was elected by the people of the State of Connecticut as chief executive, and is now governor of Connecticut. Now, let me say that it is my understanding—although I want to be perfectly frank with this House, and say that I have seen newspaper items in my own State indicating that the statement that I am about to make is not the fact—but it is my understanding, without having actually seen the written resignation of Governor LILLEY as a Member of this House, that he did resign to his predecessor, Governor Woodruff, and that he resigned before he qualified, as he did last Wednesday, as governor, and that he is no longer a Member of this House. I believe that he has not notified, as I understand is the custom and practice, but not the law, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the fact of his resignation. However, I can not say about that, but from what I have seen by casual reading in the Connecticut papers, I should say that he had not.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HIGGINS. I will not at present. I would say that it is my belief that he has resigned to the governor, and there can not be any question, for precedents establish that fact, that a resignation of a Member to the governor of the State he represents is a release by him of the office which he holds. Now, I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Is it not a fact that the same newspaper article which the gentleman refers to stated that the governor of Connecticut refused to accept the resignation of Mr. LILLEY on the ground that it was not necessary to go to the expense of having a special election to fill the position vacated by him?

Mr. HIGGINS. I will say to the gentleman that there have been many newspaper articles upon this and a great many other subjects, and I do not speak of any one particular newspaper article. I say further to the gentleman that if Governor LILLEY did resign, as I understand to be the fact, as I stated to the House, not of my own knowledge, but of my personal belief, for I do not wish to deceive the House for one moment, his successor was elected to qualify on the 4th day of next March, and I say in my opinion there is no law in Connecticut which requires the executive to immediately and forthwith call a special election. I say further to the gentleman that I do not believe it would be necessary, or that it is necessary, to fill the unexpired term from the date of his resignation until the 4th of next March.

Mr. HENRY of Texas. Was there not another newspaper story or interview with Mr. LILLEY——

Mr. HIGGINS. Oh, I can not state what all of the Connecticut newspapers have printed. I am willing to assume that the gentleman from Texas has employed a news-clipping bureau of the newspaper articles in Connecticut on this subject, but I have not. I can simply say that there have been a great many articles printed on this and other subjects in which Mr. LILLEY's name was used more or less as a text, and they have received wide circulation.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield just a moment for a question? The gentleman has stated that Mr. LILLEY sent to the former governor his resignation.

Mr. HIGGINS. I do not state it as a fact, but I do state it as a Member of this House—for I would not deceive the House for a moment—that that is my opinion about it, and my belief.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman would not deceive anybody.

Mr. HIGGINS. I have never been told by Governor Woodruff or Governor LILLEY, or by anyone else, that Governor LILLEY has resigned from this House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask why, after he sent his resignation to former Governor Woodruff and he would not accept it, why does not Congressman LILLEY notify Governor LILLEY that Congressman LILLEY has resigned and abandoned his office? [Laughter.]

Mr. HIGGINS. Oh, I was in hopes the gentleman from Tennessee would not ask any such question.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman from New York yield to me to ask a question of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. PAYNE. I will yield for a question.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut, in view of the statement the gentleman from Connecticut has just made, if he would not be willing now to ask unanimous consent that the name of Mr. LILLEY be dropped from the rolls of the House?

Mr. HIGGINS. Why, Mr. Speaker, I have been a Member of this House long enough to believe in orderly procedure; I believe that is the best procedure, and I believe the motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] ought to be adopted by this House, the resolution sent to the Judiciary Committee, that they may investigate this question, that we may be as fully informed as possible.

Mr. WILLETT. Will the gentleman from New York yield for an amendment?

Mr. PAYNE. No; I will not.

Mr. Speaker, this debate has shown that the motion referring this resolution to the Judiciary Committee ought to be adopted by the House. The gentleman from Connecticut states that it is his belief that Mr. LILLEY resigned to his predecessor before he was inaugurated as governor of Connecticut. The House ought to have an opportunity to ascertain the fact in regard to that, because if he did resign, in my humble opinion, he ceased to be a Member of the House; and the law gives to the governor of Connecticut no right to refuse to accept a resignation of a Member of this House; he can not compel him to remain a Member. If any gentleman doubts the law on that subject, then it should go to the Judiciary Committee, that they may report to the House on the question, so that there can be no question about the propriety of this motion. I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman accept an amendment that the committee report within five days?

Mr. WILLETT. That is the amendment I wish to offer.

Mr. PAYNE. I will consent to a modification of the resolution that the committee report within ten days.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Very well.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report back to the House within ten days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question on his motion to refer the resolution as amended to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

RIGHT OF WAY ACROSS NIOBRARA MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 8143) granting to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company a right to change the location of its right of way across the Niobrara Military Reservation, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair will state that this bill was read yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, is not this the day set apart for private claims?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And matters to be considered from the Committee on Claims?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, it seems to me that that committee ought to have the day, and if unanimous consents are to be given, it will postpone the consideration of matters on the Private Calendar. I will ask the Speaker if there are any more requests for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been applied to by one gentleman who desires to fix the time for eulogies on a deceased Member.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section, to read as follows:
"SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, the amendment is agreeable.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, read the third time, and passed.

EULOGIES.

Mr. FOELKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following order, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House order No. 14.

Ordered, That there be a session of the House at 12 m. on Sunday, January 24, 1909, for the delivery of eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. CHARLES T. DUNWELL, late a Member of this House from New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the order.

The question was taken, and the order was agreed to.

FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce from the further consideration of privileged House resolution 479, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 479.

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be required to inform the House, as soon as may be, what advances have occurred in freight rates in different parts of the United States since the passage of the Hepburn amendment, June 29, 1906; whether such advances have been occasioned by an advance in the tariff rate or by a change in classification or by charging for some privilege which was formerly accorded free.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I now move the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the resolution be agreed to.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that the pension appropriation bill was to have been called up to-day, and to give notice that it will not be called up until to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, in order to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. CURRIER in the chair.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to ask unanimous consent to take up such bills on the Private Calendar as are in order to-day that are not objected to. I do that for the reason that I believe if we can take up bills which are not objected to we can clear the calendar this afternoon, but if we are to take up bills to which there is objection we will spend the entire afternoon in discussion of them, and thus defeat the passage of many bills which have been favorably acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that bills be taken up to which no objection is made.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I understand that to mean that bills will be taken up in their order, and if objection be made they will be passed without prejudice; I do not want to lose the order.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question? Reserving the right to object, suppose we get through with the bills to which there is no objection?

Mr. MILLER. Then we go ahead on the calendar in the regular order and dispose of those objected to. That is what we want to do.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

H. C. LINN AND SAMUEL POWELL.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14000) for the relief of H. C. Linn and Samuel Powell.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have that passed.

The CHAIRMAN. Passed without prejudice?

Mr. MILLER. Passed without prejudice. I may say that one of the parties to that bill is dead, and I want to have the bill passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

WILLIAM JENNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17059) for the relief of Mate William Jenney, U. S. Navy, retired, and eight other retired mates, who have been placed on the retired list with the rank and pay of one grade above that actually held by them at the time of retirement.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the Clerk please furnish me with the calendar number of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. 921.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that that bill may be passed by without prejudice, as I understand that all the relief asked for has been given to these men by general law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PHOEBE CLARK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11632) for the relief of Phoebe Clark.

Mr. MANN. I ask that that bill be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DAVISON CHEMICAL COMPANY, BALTIMORE, MD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4632) for the relief of the Davison Chemical Company, of Baltimore, Md.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the Davison Chemical Company, of Baltimore, Md., the sum of $13,460, in payment for damages sustained to the sulphuric-acid plant owned by said company and located at Hawkins Point, Maryland, by reason of the firing of high-power guns at Fort Armistead, Md., in April, 1903, said amount having been found due the said company by two boards of army officers convened by the Secretary of War, as set forth in House Document No. 659, second session Fifty-eighth Congress.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7, after the word "in," insert the word "full," and in line 8, before the word "damages," insert the word "all," so that the bill will read, "in full payment for all damages received."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the committee, I desire to say the amendment is entirely acceptable to the members of the committee.

Mr. SABATH. What is this damage for?

Mr. MANN. It was damages caused by firing of cannon to a chemical manufacturing plant. It is very fully set out in the report and there is no question but that the damages ought to be allowed, but the damages allowed are not the damages claimed, and I wish to insert in the bill saying that it is in full payment for all damages, and dispose of the claim for all time.

Mr. FINLEY. Which was located there first—the chemical plant?

Mr. MANN. The chemical plant was located there first.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL J. ROGERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12712) for the relief of the estate of Samuel J. Rogers.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have that bill go over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule it will be passed without prejudice.

VOLUNTEERS IN CAYUSE INDIAN WAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19859) to provide for the payment of certain volunteers who rendered service to the Territory of Oregon in the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact that the Clerk has omitted calendar No. 972, entitled: "A bill for the relief of the estate of Samuel J. Rogers."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Kansas that the Clerk did read that bill in its order, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected to it.

Mr. MANN. I thought I was objecting to Calendar No. 970. That is what the Clerk read. I understood him to read Calendar No. 970, H. R. 1536. I make no objection to Calendar No. 972.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MILLER. The Clerk should report the bill, Calendar No. 970, from the Committee on Military Affairs, and that is the one to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

WILLIAM MITCHELL.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1536) authorizing the Secretary of War to recognize William Mitchell, deceased, as having been a member of Company C, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Mounted Infantry, civil war.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have that go over. I object to it.

Mr. PARKER. I wish the gentleman would not object. That is a case where a man was killed after enlistment and before muster, leaving a wife and five children. It is a case that really begs.

Mr. MANN. The case will be reached later in the afternoon.

Mr. MILLER. Let it be passed now.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed without prejudice, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

SAMUEL J. ROGERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12712), for the relief of the estate of Samuel J. Rogers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of the estate of Samuel J. Rogers, United States 4 per cent registered bond, funded loan of 1907, No. 27101, for $500, inscribed in name of Samuel J. Rogers and alleged to have been lost: Provided, That the legal representative of said estate shall first file in the Treasury a bond in the penal sum equal to the amount of the principal and the accrued interest thereon, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim on account of the lost bond hereinbefore described and the accrued interest thereon.

Mr. MACON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman make a statement.

Mr. MILLER. It is simply for the payment of a bond that has been lost, and the department recommends the legislation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is the nature of the security? Is it a bonding company or an individual bond?

Mr. MILLER. I will read from the report:

The bond has been called for redemption, and matured and ceased to bear interest July 2, 1907. No claim for the bond has been presented to this department by any person other than the administrator of the estate of the payee, and while the evidence as to the probable condition of the bond is inconclusive, in view of the fact that the bond has been a matured bond for more than six months without the presentation of any claim therefor, the department sees no reason for interposing any objection to its redemption in favor of the payee under the terms set forth in the bill in question.

Mr. MACON. This is just to substitute a bond for a lost bond?

Mr. MILLER. That is all.

Mr. MACON. And security properly given guaranteeing that the other bond will never be presented?

Mr. SLAYDEN. The question raised in my mind is as to the character of the security the Government usually receives in cases of that kind. If it is an individual, he may be solvent to-day and insolvent to-morrow. If it is a well-established bonding company, with a long time or a perpetual charter, the Government is more secure than if it is an individual.

Mr. MANN. I am not able to tell the gentleman, but there is one case on the calendar where they had to put up a government or some other bond.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is still better, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CAYUSE INDIAN WAR.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19859) to provide for the payment of certain volunteers who rendered service to the Territory of Oregon in the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle, through the office of the Auditor for the War Department, the claims for pay for services in the Cayuse Indian war of 1847 and 1848, in Oregon, of John Minto and Charles Balds, and of Ellen E. Hackett, widow of John C. Hackett; Missouri A. Cornelius, widow of Thomas R. Cornelius; Mary J. Kelzur, widow of John B. Kelzur; Amanda Reese, widow of Willard H. Reese, Mary E. Carnahan, widow of Hiram Carnahan; Polly C. Butler, widow of Isaac Butler; and Sarah E. Schantz, widow of P. C. Kelzur, at the rate of $1.50 per day, the same as was paid to those whose claims have already been settled, the length of service to be taken from the rolls of this war now on file in the office of The Military Secretary of the War Department or the records of said war on file in the office of the adjutant-general of the State of Oregon; and the sum of not more than $1,500, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay the aforementioned claims, and this sum, not to exceed $1,500, is made available until all of these claims are settled or fully disposed of.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In the name "Balds," as it appears in line 8, on page 1, strike out the letter "a" and insert in lieu thereof the letter "o," so as to make it read "Charles Bolds."

Mr. HOLLIDAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows how the Committee on Claims obtained jurisdiction of this bill? The bill clearly belongs to the Committee on War Claims. I have an indistinct recollection that that committee at one time had that bill under consideration. It is certainly a war claims bill, and not a private claim.

Mr. MANN. Is the Cayuse Indian war recognized as a war by the Government?

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I think so. If the gentleman from Kansas can make a satisfactory explanation, I shall not raise any question.

Mr. MILLER. This bill came to the Committee on Claims in the regular orderly proceedure of the House. It was referred to the Committee on Claims, and no Member raised any question as to the jurisdiction of that committee. We assumed jurisdiction, and the bill being there, the question not being raised, we have given careful consideration to it, and report the bill back to the House and ask the adoption of the amendment to the bill recommended in the report.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question. The amount carried in this bill does not exceed $1,500, does it?

Mr. MILLER. No, sir.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman about the facts with reference to this bill. I could not hear the bill being read, because of the conversation going on in front.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that all the claims in reference to this matter, or nearly all of them, were presented and paid. There were a few persons who did not present their claims, because they did not know they were entitled to receive pay for their service. Afterwards they were presented, and the money which had been appropriated to pay all the claims had been turned into the Treasury, and there was no way for the Treasury Department to pay these claims. This is for the purpose of giving the Treasury Department the right to pay them.

Mr. MACON. A lot of belated claims.

Mr. MILLER. That is all. There is no question as to the merits of the claims.

Mr. FINLEY. How did the department arrive at a dollar and a half a day as being the proper amount to allow?

Mr. MILLER. That was based upon the amount on which all the other claims were adjusted and paid.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

O. MAURY & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2969) for the relief of O. Maury & Co., of Bordeaux, France.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to L. Renard, agent of O. Maury & Co., of Bordeaux, France, in full reimbursement of losses sustained by them by reason of the erroneous detention and subsequent destruction by the Bureau of Chemistry of the Department of Agriculture of three casks of wine imported into the United States by said firm, which payment is recommended by said department, the sum of $238.15, which amount is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MACON. Before that is done, I am going to ask the gentleman to explain the bill. It is for wine.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, let me read what the Secretary of Agriculture says about it:

WASHINGTON, February 13, 1908.

SIR: As requested in your letter of February 6, 1908, I inclose herewith, for use of the committee, the original papers, or copies of same, on file in this department relating to the claim of O. Maury & Co., amounting to $238.15, referred to in Senate bill 2969. As evidenced by the papers, this claim has been submitted by me to Congress several times, and will be found this year in the general deficiency bill now under consideration by the Committee on Appropriations in the House. In my opinion the claim is a just one and should be allowed. Kindly return papers.

Very respectfully, JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

Mr. MANN. I think I can explain the bill on the other proposition. Under the law now where wine comes into this country, the Secretary of Agriculture takes samples to see whether it is adulterated or misbranded. Pending the examination the sample of the wine may be placed in a warehouse or stored. In this case the wines were sampled and the sample was placed in a warehouse or in storage waiting the decision of the Government, and while there, because it was so waiting, it was spoiled and became valueless. Therefore it was thought proper that the Government should refund the value of the wine. It is probably the only case that has arisen during the enforcement of the pure-food law.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask this question: Was it spoiled by reason of the act of any officer of the Government?

Mr. MANN. It was admitted, I think, that it was spoiled without negligence on the part of the Government.

Mr. MACON. How do you know it was not bad wine and spoiled?

Mr. MANN. It was not bad wine, and spoiled, because the sample proved that the wine was good.

Mr. MACON. I am going to object to this bill.

Mr. KAHN. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MACON. The explanation has not been satisfactory to me.

Mr. KAHN. Samples of the wine were put in the government warehouse, and the Secretary again this year strongly recommends that this item be included in the general deficiency bill.

The department has had the wine in its possession. It is fully aware of all the incidents in connection with it, and the department itself recommends that this be paid, because of the conditions surrounding the claim.

Mr. MACON. Did the department detain it unusually long?

Mr. KAHN. I dare say that it may have been detained there for a long time pending these examinations. It was in the warehouse for some time. It was only a part of the shipment. The conclusion of the gentleman that the wine may have been bad is not maintained, because the balance of the wine certainly was good.

Mr. MACON. Was it used up promptly? What became of it?

Mr. KAHN. It was sold in San Francisco.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. KAHN. This wine was destroyed, but the balance was sold in San Francisco.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Chair please indicate what constitutes an objection to a bill?

Mr. MACON. Oh, I suppose I can reserve the right to object. That is all I have done. I objected, and the gentleman asked me to reserve my objection, and out of courtesy to him I have done so.

Mr. BUTLER. I am not criticising my friend at all. I thought perhaps where bills required long explanation or were in dispute in any way they could be passed over.

Mr. KAHN. I will call the attention of my friend from Arkansas to this fact——

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the bill will be ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I objected to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KAHN. May I call the gentleman's attention——

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order made, if the gentleman insists upon his objection, the bill will be passed without prejudice.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment until I can read from the report?

Mr. MANN. We will reach the bill again later for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LIEUT. COMMANDER JEROME E. MORSE, U. S. NAVY, RETIRED.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4151) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Jerome E. Morse, U. S. Navy, retired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to that bill. I might as well do it before the reading as afterwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be laid aside without prejudice. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN M. HILL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 18600) for the relief of John M. Hill.

Mr. MANN. I make the same statement with reference to that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The same order will be entered. The bill will be laid aside without prejudice. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WYATT O. SELKIRK.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 18726) for the relief of Wyatt O. Selkirk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the name of First Lieut. Wyatt O. Selkirk shall be advanced to a place next above the name of First Lieut. George A. Wildrick on the lineal list of officers of the Coast Artillery Corps, and that thereafter the name of Lieutenant Selkirk shall be borne in that relative position on the records of the War Department and on the Army Register.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is heard the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like an explanation.

Mr. PARKER. This is requested by the Chief of Staff.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is not the best reason, but it is one reason. Mr. Selkirk was appointed to the army from my State but not from my district. He was sent to Fort Leavenworth to take the examination.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I understood the bill had been laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is made the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

ULYSSES G. WINN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 604) to reimburse Ulysses G. Winn for money erroneously paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $132.80, to reimburse Ulysses G. Winn for said amount, erroneously deposited by him while United States commissioner at Center and Stonewall, in the southern district of the Indian Territory, in the years 1900 and 1901, and which were paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN H. LAYNE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15098) to correct the military record of John H. Layne.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to correct the military record of John H. Layne, late private in Company G, Nineteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, war with Spain, who was injured at Ponce, P. R., while volunteering to help save government stores which were about to be washed away by a rapidly rising stream, and have his discharge read: "Discharged by reason of injuries incurred in the line of duty," instead of "Discharged by favor."

Mr. PARKER. There was simply a mistake in the discharge.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HARRY KIMMELL.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17214) for the relief of Harry Kimmell, a commander on the retired list of the United States Navy.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Harry Kimmell, now a commander on the retired list of the United States Navy, a commander on the active list of the navy, to take rank next after Frederick C. Bieg: Provided, That the said Harry Kimmell shall establish to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, by examination pursuant to law, his physical, mental, moral, and professional fitness to perform the duties of that grade: And provided further, That the said Harry Kimmell shall be carried as an additional to the number of the grade to which he may be appointed under this act or at any time thereafter promoted: And provided further, That the said Harry Kimmell shall not by the pasage of this act be entitled to back pay of any kind.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear an explanation of that bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have read over the report. This is to authorize the President to place a man back on the active list, now on the retired list, with a certain rank. The report says that as lieutenant-commander he has had two months' sea service and is fully equal to any in the grade to which he is to be nominated if this bill passes. The department says it needs more officers in the navy, and there seems to be some justification for it, although as a general principle these bills ought not to be passed.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. What I would like to know is, Why did he quit the service originally, and why do they want to put him back in the rank which probably he would have obtained if he had stayed in the service?

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] reported the bill and is familiar with the facts. I know enough of them, perhaps, to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. MANN. I think I can answer the gentleman's question. Under the personnel act it is required that a certain number of officers shall quit the service. If they do not quit voluntarily, they put them before a board which puts them out. This man's wife was very ill and not expected to live. Thereupon he resigned from the service in order to take care of his wife, at the same time being one of those who would otherwise be put out of the service. His resignation was in 1899. After his wife became better he desired to go back into the service, and they say he was a good officer. I have no interest in the case. All I know is from the reading of the report.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois has stated the facts as well as could any member of the committee. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DAWSON] reported the bill. It is a fact, however, that the man is ready for active duty, and this will enable him to perform it, and the service needs more active men.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless objection is heard, the bill will be laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

SANFORD A. PINYAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19871) for the relief of Sanford A. Pinyan.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Sanford A. Pinyan shall hereafter be held and considered to be entitled to all of the rights and benefits that he would be entitled to on account of military service, except pay, bounty, and other emoluments, if he had been continuously in the military service of the United States as a private of Company A, First Regiment Georgia Volunteer Infantry, from the 1st day of August, 1864, to the 4th day of November, 1864, and had been honorably discharged on the date last named herein.

The bill was laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation.

MILLE LAC BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5330) for the relief of the Mille Lac band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have that go over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. That order will be made.

TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next business was the bill (S. 4049) authorizing a credit in certain accounts of the Treasurer of the United States.

The bill was read.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas objects to the present consideration of the bill, and it will be passed without prejudice.

HASTINGS STEAMBOAT COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (S. 4427) for the relief of Hastings Steamboat Company.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to have that bill go over without prejudice.

The bill was ordered to be passed without prejudice.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 23713. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across Current River, in Missouri.

H. J. Res. 219. Joint resolution to accept the gift of Constitution Island, in the Hudson River, New York.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolutions and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 111. Joint resolution authorizing the rebuilding of the dormitory at Osage Boarding School, Oklahoma, recently destroyed by fire;

S. R. 114. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to dispose of certain bronze or brass cannon;

S. 7396. An act for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States;

S. 8005. An act authorizing the establishment of aids to navigation in Alaskan waters and making an appropriation therefor;

S. 8357. An act to extend the time for disposing of lands on the Huntley project, within the ceded Crow Indian Reservation, Mont.; and

S. 8439. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise lands in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., and grant the same to the Great Northern Railway.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 Rule XXIV, the following concurrent resolutions were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

Senate concurrent resolution 68.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for a project of straightening of the Big Sioux River, in the State of South Dakota, and report same to the Congress—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 65.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for deepening the channel and the entrance to same of Warroad Harbor, Minnesota, and protecting the channel and entrance to the same by means of a dike or otherwise—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 63.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey to be made of the bar of San Francisco Bay, in the State of California, to confirm the depths shown on the charts of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and to cause estimates to be made for a project of improvement of the North, or Bonita, channel by the removal of Centissima and Sears rocks, and report the same to Congress—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 64.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause to be made a resurvey of Oakland Harbor, Alameda County, Cal., with a view of improving the same to meet the present and future demands of commerce, and to submit estimates of cost of the following three projects: Project No. 1, a channel 700 to 800 feet wide and 20 feet deep from San Francisco Bay to the foot of Tenth avenue extended, thence around Brooklyn Basin, 500 to 700 feet wide and 25 feet deep at low tide; project No. 2, same as project No. 1, except that depth be 34 feet at low tide; project No. 3, same as projects Nos. 1 and 2, except that the whole of Brooklyn Basin be dredged to pierhead line at a uniform depth of 25 or 34 feet at low tide—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 57.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 10th day of February, 1909, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses—to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

Senate concurrent resolution 60.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of the shoal or bar at the entrance to Chincoteague Bay, with a view to the removal of said shoal or bar, and providing for a channel depth of 15 feet at that point, and to submit estimates for such improvement—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Senate concurrent resolution 61.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to cause a survey and estimate to be made for a project of improvement of Lake Traverse, in the State of South Dakota and county of Roberts, and report same to the Congress—

to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

ROBERT DAVIS.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business was the bill (S. 6293) for the relief of Robert Davis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers, in settling and adjusting the accounts of Robert Davis, first lieutenant, Second Regiment Field Artillery, U. S. Army, are hereby directed to credit the said Robert Davis with the sum of $164.48, which amount of government funds was stolen from his safe on or about the 6th of February, 1904, by his post quartermaster-sergeant while the said Lieutenant Davis was acting as quartermaster at Fort Banks, Mass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is a very small amount, and the bill proposes to pay $164.48. If the bill is to be passed at all, we ought to pay the man what he lost, which was $170.66.

There is a mistake in the bill in the amount. I read from the report:

It was established at the trial that Sergeant Pullar was intrusted with the sum of $2.70 for the purchase of car tickets for use in the military service, and with the further sum of $167.96, which he was to deposit in the subtreasury in Boston. Both of the sums were embezzled by the accused and converted to his own use.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have here the official report made in this case showing the amount due to be $164.48. That is taken from the official report of the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. MANN. Well, this is from the official report of the Advocate-General. I do not care anything about that, but I call attention to an amendment which I think ought to be made. This says that government funds were stolen from his safe on or about the 6th of February, and so forth. The funds were not stolen from the safe, but the report shows that they were embezzled by a clerk. There is no use of stating an erroneous fact in the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest that this is a Senate bill, and that it has passed the Senate. I have no objection to any amendment that any Member may desire to offer. I think the amendment suggested by the gentleman is all right.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may be correct, and perhaps it would be better to pass it than to take any chances.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID W. STOCKSTILL.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8982) for the relief of David W. Stockstill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask to have that bill go over.

The bill was passed without prejudice.

R. A. SISSON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10187) for the relief of R. A. Sisson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $88.48 to R. A. Sisson, light-house keeper of Bloody Point Range, Daufuskie Island, Beaufort County, S. C., for the loss and destruction of his property during the cyclone of 1893.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the consideration of the bill, but I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Last year, because I was the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce on light-houses, I introduced a bill covering a number of claims of this sort where light keepers had lost their property through staying at their posts of duty in case of storm, most of them probably along the Gulf of Mexico, under circumstances such as that at Galveston, which seemed to absolutely warrant the Government in making the payment. These claims have been reported by the Light-House Board to Congress year after year, being referred to our committee, which has no jurisdiction of the claims. This is one of the claims covered in the entire bill. I simply wish to ask the gentleman if the committee has yet had the opportunity to consider the bill covering all of those claims. I do not wish to press the committee at all.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the committee is giving consideration to all of them, and I think all of them ought to be paid.

Mr. MANN. I introduced a general bill covering all of them.

Mr. MILLER. It is the general bill that we will report.

Mr. MACON. I want to ask the chairman a question and that is, What the Government has to do with the destruction of property by cyclone? I thought that would be an act of God and not of the Government.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman, because this matter really comes more within the jurisdiction, so far as the general purpose is concerned, of the committee I am on than the Committee on Claims, that the Government expects a light-house keeper to remain at the light-house and keep the light going regardless of weather conditions——

Mr. MACON. Tell me what property was destroyed by reason of his staying at his post.

Mr. MANN. The cyclone destroyed the light-house and his property with it.

Mr. MACON. What property did he have to keep there?

Mr. MANN. It destroyed his groceries and things of that sort, property he had to keep there upon which to live, things of that kind. The amount is $88.48.

Mr. MACON. Let me illustrate. Mr. Reid is now the ambassador to England. He resides in London. As such he is required to stay there to represent the Government, and as such, I suppose, he furnishes his own house and he must have furniture there. If a cyclone were to come along and destroy his furniture and his plate, would this Government have to reimburse him for it?

Mr. MANN. Oh, plainly not; but let me illustrate the case——

Mr. MACON. A light-house keeper has to stay at his post if a cyclone happens to come along and destroys something that he may have had there.

Mr. MANN. I suppose you may say a cyclone happens to come along, but you can not differentiate very well. Take the case of Galveston, where it was known for some time in advance the danger of remaining at the post of duty, and there were other cases of the same sort. Now, if a light-house keeper abandons a light-house it might cause great damage to shipping and, in my judgment, he ought to be permitted to stay there with the assurance that if he dies his family will receive a pension; but that is not involved here at all, but he certainly ought to receive the assurance that if he endeavors to stay there to attend to his duty, instead of carrying out his own property, as would be natural, that he would be reimbursed.

Mr. CANDLER. And, permit me to say, light-house keepers do not receive very large salaries, to say the least, and when they incur the danger of staying there their little personal effects ought to be paid for in case they are lost.

Mr. MACON. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARCELLUS BUTLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17960) for the relief of Marcellus Butler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Marcellus Butler, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100, for services rendered to the Committee on Invalid Pensions from March 5, 1901, to December 1, 1901.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I call the attention of the gentleman to the proposition that this bill, which may be all right, is to pay Marcellus Butler the sum of $100 for services rendered the Committee on Invalid Pensions from March 5, 1901, to December 1, 1901, with a letter from the very distinguished and lovable chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, stating that these services were rendered to the committee, and stating that it was near the close of the session and the Committee on Accounts were without a quorum, so that that committee could not act. Now, the fact is, the gentleman evidently was mistaken. This period of time was before the long session. The time commenced, not at the end of a term of Congress, but when there was no Committee on Invalid Pensions in existence. I do not know; perhaps the man rendered the services, but I think we ought to have a chance to consider it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Illinois that this matter was presented to the Committee on Claims, accompanied by this letter, and in person the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. SULLOWAY] stated to the committee upon his honor as a Member of this House that this work was done by Mr. Butler for him and he had never been paid for doing the work, and, as it was a small sum, I felt, as chairman of the committee, and the committee also, that it ought to be paid.

Mr. MANN. I certainly would not question the word of the gentleman in charge of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Here is the statement made by that gentleman:

The reason Mr. Butler did not receive pay for his services was that the resolution that went to the Committee on Accounts was not received by that committee in season to act and report thereon. It was near the close of the session and, as far as I remember, the committee was without a quorum.

Now, the fact is, that the time this man rendered the services was at the beginning of the Congress immediately after the sitting of Congress, immediately after the 4th of March, and it was during the interim when there was no Committee on Invalid Pensions, and the gentleman from New Hampshire is evidently mistaken as to the facts in the case. It may be that the man ought to be paid; I do not know.

Mr. MILLER. I think, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is right about it, but in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I do not like to have this passed over.

Mr. MANN. Well, it will be reached again.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. Oh, I am not objecting, but after calling attention to the matter if nobody else wishes to object I do not. Maybe the man rendered services, but he did not render services to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during that time.

Mr. CANDLER. He made it appear to the committee that this man rendered services or it would not have been favorably reported. The committee was thoroughly convinced that the services were rendered.

Mr. SABATH. What services, if any, did he render to the committee?

Mr. MILLER. As janitor to the committee, for which he was not paid, as was represented by the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. SABATH. Was the committee in session then?

Mr. MILLER. The clerks are required to be here even though Congress is not in session. The clerks were required to be here and were in charge of the room, and this man rendered services as janitor for that committee room. All the other janitors have been paid.

The bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

T. C. WAKEFIELD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19653) for the relief of T. C. Wakefield.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to T. C. Wakefield the sum of $18, for expenses incurred and services rendered in making the proper returns for the Salmon Lake voting precinct, Kougarok district, Alaska.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask some one, this being a bill for sending the election returns from one place to a central place, what provision is there in law for paying such expenses in the future and how is it expected to be paid? Is it to be paid by a claim every time?

Mr. CALE. I do not know as I can answer the legal phase that the gentleman inquires for, but I do know that the services are rendered, as the report will show. Just what the law is in relation to the matter I can not answer.

Mr. MANN. Here is a case where this Congress authorized an election to be held for the election of the gentleman who has the floor, and the polls are widely scattered, I suppose. A man says that it took him three or four days' time, more or less, to bring in the returns from one of the polls. Now, is there any provision in the law for the payment of the man for such purpose, and how is the party to be paid in the future?

Mr. CALE. In the same manner as this.

Mr. MANN. If I thought we were to have a claim every year or two years for $18 or so, to waste the time of Congress, I should object. I think the gentleman ought to get busy and have a bill passed covering the case.

Mr. CALE. This is the first bill of that kind that has ever been before the House.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS J. SHOCKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19893) for the relief of Thomas J. Shocker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Thomas J. Shocker shall hereafter be held and considered to be entitled to all of the rights and benefits that he would be entitled to on account of military service, except pay, bounty, and other emoluments, if he had been continuously in the military service of the United States as a private of Company B, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, from the 12th day of September, 1863, to the 1st day of July, 1865, and had been honorably discharged on the date last named herein.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the second section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to strike out the second section. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is but one section to the bill.

Mr. PRINCE. The bill that is now before the House for consideration is the bill H. R. 19893, Calendar No. 1003.

Mr. MILLER. That is all right. I have no objection to that.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY A. TOLBERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7048) for the relief of Henry A. Tolbert.

Mr. MACON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

CHARLES H. DUNNING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18487) for the relief of Charles H. Dunning.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Charles H. Dunning, late postmaster at Rome, N. Y., the sum of $421.21, paid by him in settlement of his accounts with the Government to cover loss sustained by reason of the failure of the Fort Stanwix National Bank, of Rome, N. Y.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Why is the Government proposing to reimburse this man for the loss of money that he had placed on deposit in a bank? I gather that that is the purpose of it.

Mr. MILLER. Let me read the part of the report that refers to that.

Mr. MANN. The bank was a good institution, and he deposited the money there. The bank failed. I remember the case because it appealed to me, having been somewhat in a similar position once myself. The Government does not permit postmasters under the rules to deposit money in banks except national depositories. The Government exacts a bond. If a postmaster deposits money in a safe and the burglar breaks open the safe and gets the money, the Government is reimbursed.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Has that been the uniform policy of the Government?

Mr. MANN. That is the law.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me, that was the law until the last session of Congress, when a measure was passed authorizing postmasters to deposit postal funds in any state or national bank in addition to national depositories.

Mr. MANN. Now, in this town there was a national bank of good reputation, without any question in regard to its solvency. This postmaster—I think properly—thinking it was safer to keep the money in the bank than in his jeans or in his office, deposited it in the bank. Unfortunately for him, the bank failed, and the Government required him to put up the money that was on deposit in the bank. This is to reimburse him for that amount.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I reserve the right to object. Is the law now that the postmaster can deposit money in national banks or keep it on his person, if he sees fit?

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman from Wisconsin states.

Mr. STAFFORD. The law formerly was that if he deposited it in any bank it must be a national depository.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Then prior to the last session of Congress the law was, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated, that the money must be deposited in some designated bank?

Mr. STAFFORD. The law provided that the postmaster must either deposit it in a depository or else keep it in a safe, or in some designated manner as he cares for his personal property, as presented by the regulations. But the Post-Office Committee recommended to the House, and there was ultimately carried in the appropriation bill a provision authorizing postmasters not only to deposit their funds in depositories, but in any national or state bank.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Without security?

Mr. STAFFORD. But the law still prescribed that the postmaster must give bond as formerly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Now, just one question more. Suppose the postmaster keeps the money in his private safe and it is broken into by burglars. Is he responsible?

Mr. STAFFORD. The postmaster is not responsible. The Government will reimburse him for any funds taken from the safe if he shows that he has exercised reasonable care.

Mr. COX of Indiana. If he has not been guilty of negligence he will be reimbursed?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If he keeps a safe and keeps it locked.

Mr. MACON. Then, if I understand this case, the postmaster is guilty of a violation of the law if he puts the money in the bank. And now you are seeking to justify a man for a violation of the law by reimbursing him.

Mr. STAFFORD. He did not violate the law. He only took added precaution.

Mr. MACON. He violated the law; and for that reason I object.

Mr. MILLER. There was no violation of law. I do not believe the gentleman will object if he understands the facts in the case. There was no depository in which he could keep the money, and he did what every other sensible postmaster in the United States would have done under the circumstances, and is doing continually. He put the money in a substantial bank for the purpose of making it secure, rather than keep it upon his person or in his house. Had he kept it in his house or on his person he would have been reimbursed for the loss, but having put it in a good substantial bank, now, then, he is asked by the Government of the United States to make it good, since that bank subsequently failed with the money in it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Do I understand you to say that he deposited the money in a national bank?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him just a question with reference to the circumstances, and with reference to this bill generally? If a postmaster deposited money prior to the last session of Congress in a national bank of good standing and the national bank failed, can he now be reimbursed under the law without a separate act of Congress?

Mr. MILLER. He can not be reimbursed without a separate act of Congress, unless he has deposited the money in a regularly designated depository.

Mr. DAVIS. This was not a depository, then, but simply an ordinary national bank?

Mr. MILLER. The bank failed, and he lost 75 per cent of the money. The dividends did not pay that amount.

Mr. DAVIS. Now, is the law such that he can be reimbursed without an independent act of Congress?

Mr. STAFFORD. The law now permits him to deposit the funds not only in national banks, but in state banks, and the law should have been corrected a long time ago, in the opinion of almost all the members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. DAVIS. Suppose this deposit was made three years ago in a national bank. The bank failed and the postmaster has been required to reimburse the Treasury. Can he now be reimbursed under the existing law without an act of Congress?

Mr. STAFFORD. The law that was passed last year was not retroactive in its character. It merely provided for subsequent transactions. Of course, under the supposititious case presented by the gentleman, he would have to come to Congress with a private act.

Mr. MILLER. He has to present a separate bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Is the bill now under consideration for loss of funds deposited in a bank prior to the passage of this law?

Mr. MILLER. Yes. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The next business was the bill (S. 2901) authorizing the Omaha tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. I ask that that go over.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. Under the rule, that order will be made.

HEIRS OF CORNPLANTER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 16048) for the relief of the heirs of Cornplanter, alias John O'Bial or Abeel, a Seneca Indian chief.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. HACKNEY. The bill has been covered by the omnibus Indian bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the bill will be laid aside, without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. It should be laid aside, with the recommendation that it lie on the table. A similar provision has become a law.

Mr. HACKNEY. It ought to be stricken from the calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois move that it be laid aside with a recommendation that it lie on the table?

Mr. MANN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. WOOD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 15603) for the relief of John W. Wood.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That John W. Wood, postmaster at Pasadena, Los Angeles County, Cal., be, and is hereby, released from all liability on account of stamps to the amount of $13,000, stolen from his office on or about May 17, 1907, and the said sum of $13,000 is hereby ordered credited to him on his accounts as such postmaster, and the payment to him of the balance due after allowing such credit is hereby authorized.

Mr. MANN. Nobody objects to this bill, I believe, but the postmaster for whose benefit the bill is passed asks that there be an appropriation made for the amount.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to accepting such an amendment.

Mr. MANN. There ought to be an amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to the acceptance of an amendment providing for an appropriation if there is anything found due. This is for an adjustment of the account of the postmaster, to allow him credit for certain amounts. Then if there is anything found due him over and above that, there ought to be an appropriation to pay it. There is no question, on the merits of the bill, of his right to recover.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is there another case of burglary?

Mr. MANN. One thousand three hundred dollars' worth of stamps were stolen.

Mr. MILLER. I move an amendment at the close of the bill providing an appropriation, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of the balance found due.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"And that there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum sufficient to pay the amount, if any, found due said John W. Wood hereunder."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

WILMERDING-LOEWE COMPANY, OF SAN FRANCISCO.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 19641) for the relief of the Wilmerding-Loewe Company, of San Francisco, Cal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to the Wilmerding-Loewe Company, of San Francisco, Cal., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $249.81, the same being the amount of money deposited with the collector of internal revenue for the first district of California by the said Wilmerding-Loewe Company for the purchase of five tax-paid spirit stamps to denote the payment of the internal-revenue tax on five packages of spirits then deposited in special bonded warehouse No. 6, at San Francisco, Cal., which spirits were the property of the said Wilmerding-Loewe Company and were totally destroyed by fire on April 18, 1906, before the delivery of the said stamps.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the words "before the delivery of the said stamps" be stricken out. They are not necessary there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2 strike out the words "before the delivery of the said stamps."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

C. W. REID AND SAM DAUBE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4562) for the relief of C. W. Reid and Sam Daube.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to refund to C. W. Reid and Sam Daube the sum of $688.24, said sum having been paid by them as sureties on the forfeited bail bond of J. P. Newcomb in the case of the United States of America against J. F. Newcomb, heretofore pending in the United States court for the eastern district of Texas, at Paris, Tex., on final judgment rendered after said J. F. Newcomb, the principal in said bond, had been apprehended through the information and assistance of the said C. W. Reid and Sam Daube and after he had been convicted in said court upon the charge of incest, the offense for which he was under bond to appear in said case of the United States of America against J. F. Newcomb, the said sum of $688.24 being the amount left after deducting from the total amount of said bail bond the expense incurred by the Government in apprehending Newcomb, less the sum of $125 advanced by Reid and Daube to aid the recapture.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ANNA B. MOORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1751) to reimburse Anna B. Moore, late postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., for money expended for clerical assistance.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Anna B. Moore, late postmaster at Rhyolite, Nev., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,092, to reimburse her for money expended for necessary clerical assistance.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

WILLARD W. ALT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11039) for the relief of Willard W. Alt, of Hyannis, Nebr.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to Willard W. Alt the sum of $490 for surveys made of public lands in the State of Nebraska, in accordance with specific instructions of the Government under his contract with the Government therefor, dated May 26, 1900, and May 9, 1901, authorized by acts of Congress approved March 1, 1899, and January 14, 1901, respectively.

The following committee amendments were read:

Line 5, strike out the word "four" and insert in place thereof the word "three."

Line 6, strike out the word "ninety" and insert in place thereof the word "sixty-five."

Lines 9 and 10, strike out the words "and May 9, 1901."

Line 10, strike out the word "acts" and insert in place thereof the word "act."

Lines 12 and 13, strike out the words "and January 14, 1901, respectively."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be three bills for this man now pending. He was a surveyor under a contract. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska whether it is not possible for the Government to make a contract for a survey in Nebraska without having a bill brought in for extra services. Here are three bills pending before one Congress by one surveyor.

Mr. KINKAID. I will say to the gentleman that it is possible, but they did not do so in this case; and this resurvey was done on the express written instructions of the department.

Mr. MANN. I think this case is made out in this particular bill. It looks very satisfactory, but he has three bills pending. Can not they make a contract out there without having extra services for the surveyor? This man seems to be very lively when he can bring in three separate bills before one Congress to get extra services.

Mr. KINKAID. We put it all into one bill, but the department required us to divide it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no question but what the department ought to submit these cases in the form of estimates and ask for appropriations, but they have not done it, or at least in some cases they have not. I had a number of cases of this kind, and years ago I finally succeeded in getting the department to adopt, as far as my State is concerned, the policy of submitting them in the form of estimates, and they were paid in that form. That ought to be done in every case. I think they are clearly legitimate expenditures, and yet they are beyond the contracts. For instance, in a contract for the survey of a township they assume that it will cost a certain sum, and when the surveyor reaches the last 3 or 4 miles he finds that it costs a great deal more.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CORNELIUS VAN COTT.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15218) for the relief of the sureties on the official bond of Cornelius Van Cott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the estate of Cornelius Van Cott, late postmaster of the city of New York, and the sureties on his bond be relieved from the payment to the United States of America of the sum of $1,285.71, the amount paid H. Clayton Graff during the fourth quarter of the year 1902 and the first and second quarters of the year 1903, who was carried on the pay rolls at the New York City post-office for said period.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask for an explanation of this bill.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNET].

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, the explanation is this: The department here in Washington sent this man Graff to New York with instructions to the postmaster there to put him to work at certain work. He had no option in the matter at all. He did put him at work, and his salary, instead of being paid from the departmental sources here, was paid from funds of the New York City post-office. After Mr. Van Cott died the auditor determined that the salary was not rightfully paid from the New York City end, and the sureties were obliged to pay $1,200.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York is slightly in error as to the facts. Instead of sending the clerk from here to New York they took a clerk on the rolls of New York and ordered him to report here for some special work, and he was carried on the rolls at New York, working in Washington upon special work upon which he was an expert. Because he was here the auditor disallowed the pay roll as far as New York was concerned, and the sureties on the bond of the New York postmaster were obliged to pay.

Mr. BENNET of New York. The fact is he was ordered on the roll by the department.

Mr. MANN. He was ordered here on expert work concerning stamping machines because he was an expert. He was not paid by the department in Washington; he was paid by the postmaster of New York City. There is no question but that he rendered the service.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

STEAM LIGHTER "CLIMAX."

The next business was the bill (S. 2873) for the relief of the owners of the steam lighter Climax and the cargo laden aboard thereof.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claims of the owners of the steam lighter Climax, injured and sunk by collision with the U. S. light-house tender Cactus on the afternoon of the 25th day of November, 1905, in the East River, off the borough of Manhattan, city of New York, State of New York, for and on account of the loss and injury to the said vessel and cargo and damages to the owners thereof, may be submitted to the United States district court for the southern district of New York, under and in compliance with the rules of the said court sitting as a court of admiralty, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine and to render judgment thereupon upon the same principles and measures of liability and damages in like cases in admiralty: Provided, however, That the investigation of the said claim shall be made upon the following basis:

First. The said court shall find the facts attending the loss and injury to the said steam lighter Climax and her cargo and damages to the owners thereof.

Second. If it shall appear that the responsibility therefor rests with the said U. S. light-house tender Cactus the court shall then ascertain and determine the amounts which should be paid to the owners, respectively, of the Climax, and of her cargo, in order to reimburse them for the losses and damages so sustained, and shall render a decree accordingly.

SEC. 2. That should said decree be rendered in favor of the owners of the Climax and her cargo, the amount thereof may be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL GARLAND.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 2245) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claims against the Choctaw Nation of Samuel Garland, deceased.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object to that and ask that the bill go over.

The bill was ordered to be passed without prejudice.

THEODORE F. NORTHROP.

The next business was the bill (S. 2253) for the relief of Theodore F. Northrop.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Theodore F. Northrop, late first lieutenant, Second Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, shall be held and considered to have been a captain of cavalry, in command of scouts in the army of General Sherman, from September 10, 1864, to May 22, 1865; and the Secretary of War is authorized to issue to said Northrop a certificate of such service and of honorable discharge in accordance with this act: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall become due and payable by reason of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That Theodore F. Northrop, late first lieutenant, Second Regiment New York Cavalry Volunteers, and who commanded a body of mounted military scouts in the army of General Sherman from January 3, 1865, to March 31, 1865, shall be held and considered to have been an officer of the Volunteer Army during that time, for the purpose of an application for a medal of honor: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall become due or payable by virtue of this act."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask that that be laid over.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his objection until he can hear an explanation?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I will state that Northrop served for three years. He then was mustered out and took command of a company of military scouts, and showed himself to be of great bravery and gallantry at that time in the march to the sea, going down from Atlanta. He wants a medal of honor.

Mr. MANN. I am satisfied with the explanation.

Mr. PARKER. Then I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

BENJAMIN C. WELCH.

The next business was the bill (S. 5388) for the relief of Benjamin C. Welch.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws the authorization of the Secretary of War of May 7, 1863, permitting Benjamin C. Welch, formerly first lieutenant Company B, Fortieth New York Volunteers, to reenter the service shall be held and considered as an honorable discharge from his service with that command.

Mr. MANN. I shall have to ask that that go over.

Mr. CAPRON. Does the gentleman from Illinois understand the bill to which he has just objected?

Mr. MANN. I may be mistaken, but I understand the department is not friendly to this. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to pass. In a few words one can state the case. This man took charge of the body of another officer of his company and went to Aquia Creek, expecting a minister of his church at home to come and take the body home for burial. There was no one there to take it. The man had his pass to Aquia Creek. He reached Boston and went home with the remains. He came back to the army and was dismissed the service for this cause. When the attention of the Secretary of War was called to this, he said that in view of the mitigating circumstances, although this man had passed out without leave, the governor of his State or any State might recommission the man and he would be accepted in the army. There was no vacancy, and the man reenlisted as a private soldier and served throughout the war and was honorably discharged. That five or six days' absence without leave is all there is against the soldier with a remarkably honorable record. He now simply desires that that be corrected and cleared up. I will agree that the circumstances warranted his dismissal under the war conditions then existing.

Mr. MANN. I shall not object.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID ROBERTSON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5808) placing David Robertson on the retired list of the United States Army.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to that and ask to have it go over.

The bill was ordered to be passed without prejudice.

R. J. B. NEWCOMBE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8558) for the relief of R. J. B. Newcomb.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to R. J. B. Newcomb, his representatives or assigns, the sum of $1,500, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be for loss sustained in constructing wharf and boathouse at the life-saving station on South Manitou Island, Michigan.

With the following amendments:

Line 4, strike out the word "Newcomb" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Newcombe."

In lines 5 and 6 strike out the words "one thousand five hundred dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "nine hundred and sixty dollars and four cents."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Without objection, the title was amended so as to read:

A bill for the relief of R. J. B. Newcombe.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE M. VOORHEES.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 17572) for the relief of George M. Voorhees.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and instructed to interpret and consider Special Orders, No. 59, date February 5, 1863, approved February 10, 1863, equivalent to the honorable discharge of George M. Voorhees, late captain Company D, Ninety-third Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry: Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES ENGSTROM AND C. PETERSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19757) for the relief of Charles Engstrom and C. Petersen.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that bill go over; I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. CALE. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois reserve the right to object, or object?

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to reserving it.

Mr. CALE. This bill, as the report shows these gentlemen have been out of their money for eight or nine years——

Mr. MANN. But I propose to discuss the bill before it is passed, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, then I will ask to have it passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and under the rules the bill will be passed without prejudice.

SENECA NATION OF INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19746) to ratify a certain lease with the Seneca Nation of Indians.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that go over.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed without prejudice.

HEIRS OF MYRA CLARK GAINES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6648) for the relief of the heirs of Myra Clark Gaines, deceased.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that go over.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that be passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed without prejudice.

GEORGE W. BLACK AND J. R. WILSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4166) to relieve George W. Black and J. R. Wilson from a certain judgment in favor of the United States and to relieve George W. Black, J. R. Wilson, and W. M. Newell of a certain judgment in favor of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George W. Black and J. R. Wilson be, and they are hereby, relieved and discharged of and from all liability on account of the judgment rendered against them as sureties on the forfeited recognizance or bail bond where B. H. Gallway is principal, which judgment was rendered in the United States district court for the middle district of Alabama on May 28, 1891, for $200 and the costs, $26.40; and that George W. Black, J. R. Wilson, and W. M. Newell be, and they are hereby, relieved and discharged of and from all liability on account of the judgment rendered against them as sureties on the forfeited recognizance or bail bond where J. R. Wilson is principal, which judgment was rendered in the United States district court for the middle district of Alabama on December 12, 1892, for $150 and the costs, $26.40; and that the said judgments shall be canceled and marked satisfied on the records of said court by the United States attorney for the middle district of Alabama.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

F. S. JETTE & SON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2911) for the relief of F. S. Jette & Son, of Savannah, Chatham County, Ga., for damage done to their wharf by U. S. dredge Cumberland.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to F. S. Jette & Son, of Chatham County, Ga., the sum of $70 for money expended and labor performed in repairing damages done to their wharf at Savannah, Chatham County, Ga., by the U. S. dredge Cumberland on May 24, 1906.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, this is my bill and I noticed the Clerk read it J. S. Jette. It should be F. S. Jette.

Mr. MILLER. It is F. S. Jette.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGEPORT NATIONAL BANK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13644) for the relief of the Bridgeport National Bank, Bridgeport, Ohio.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of the Bridgeport National Bank, Bridgeport, Ohio, United States 5 per cent coupon bond, issued under the act of January 14, 1875, No. 19649, for $1,000, with interest from February 1, 1899, to the date of the maturity of said bond: Provided, That the said Bridgeport National Bank shall first file in the Treasury a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said bond and the interest due thereon, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the said bond and the said interest.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

GEORGE H. TRACY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20171), to correct the military record of George H. Tracy.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That George H. Tracy, late captain Company I, Thirty-third Regiment Missouri Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the service of the United States by Special Orders, No. 24, Department and Army of the Tennessee, dated March 4, 1865, and said order shall be held in force, and Special Orders of the War Department No. 102, dated March 1, 1865, dishonorably dismissing said Tracy, shall be held revoked.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, in this case Captain Tracy has an honorable discharge dated March 4, 1865. It is based on a surgeon's certificate of disability, he having been in the hospital for three months. He did not find out until 1907 that he had been dishonorably dismissed by another discharge dated March 1, 1865, which was based on the report of his colonel made before he went into the hospital, when he thought that he was shamming to try to escape from duty. The colonel joins in an affidavit saying that he made a mistake. I can give all the dates that run back to September, 1864, if desired. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JULIUS A. KAISER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12707) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser.

Mr. MANN. I ask that that bill go over.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed without prejudice.

S. R. GREEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 213) for the relief of S. R. Green.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to S. R. Green, of Clackamas County, Oreg., the sum of $85, the same being the amount deposited by said S. R. Green in the names of James Tracy and S. R. Green in the First National Bank of Portland, Oreg., on September 1, 1897, to the credit of the United States Treasurer, for office fees in connection with the survey of the Della, Lone Grave, Idle Fancy, and Cyclone quartz-mining claims in Lane County, Oreg., which survey was duly abandoned, and although a demand made for the return of said $85 so deposited as aforesaid, said sum was covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

JOHN S. HIGGINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 879), for the relief of John S. Higgins, paymaster, United States Navy.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proper accounting officers in settling and adjusting the accounts of John S. Higgins, paymaster, United States Navy, are hereby directed to credit in his account said John S. Higgins with the sum of $1,047.14, which amount of government funds he paid to Mr. Stephen J. Harvey, paymaster's clerk, United States Navy, for duty performed under orders of the Secretary of the Navy at Pensacola (Fla.) Navy-Yard, from November, 1905, to September, 1906, under Paymaster F. G. Pyne, U. S. Navy.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

CHICAGO, PEORIA AND ST. LOUIS RAILWAY COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 60), for the relief of the Chicago, Peoria and St. Louis Railway Company.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

NIELS P. LARSEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8734) for the relief of Niels P. Larsen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $148 to Niels P. Larsen, postmaster at Otto, Wyo., to reimburse him for postal funds lost by fire while being transported to a government depository.

Mr. MANN. There is a distinction between postal funds and money-order funds, and what were lost were money-order funds, as shown by the report.

Mr. MILLER. I have no objection to that change being made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "postal," in line 7, and insert the words "money order."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LANDS IN BOISE, IDAHO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 6136), authorizing the Secretary of War to issue patents to certain lands in Boise, Idaho.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue patent in fee to Boise City, a municipal corporation, to that tract of land lying within the boundaries of the United States military reservation at Boise City, Ada County, Idaho, and bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a stone marking the southwest boundary of the United States military reservation, thence north 22° 12′ west 2,719.86 feet; thence north 20° west 351.84 feet; thence north 70° east 15.5 feet to a line 22 feet from the center of the Capital Water Company's ditch; thence in an easterly direction following a line 22 feet from the center line of said ditch and parallel to the same to the intersection with said line of the southeasterly boundary of the reservation; thence south 70° west to the point of beginning, subject to any rights of the Capital Water Company for the use of said grounds as a right of way or an easement to convey water.

Also the following amendments:

Strike out in line 4, page 1, the words "and directed to issue patent in fee to" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "to make a license, revocable at his discretion, for the use for park purposes by."

Amend the title so as to read:

"An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a revocable license to certain lands to Boise, Idaho."

Mr. CANDLER. I will ask if that bill was not passed by unanimous consent two or three days ago?

Mr. MANN. Which bill was that—the Boise bill?

Mr. CANDLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It was called up by unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, and objection was made because it was on the Private Calendar, although it is in the nature of a public bill. There was no objection to it the other day except for that reason.

Mr. CANDLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside, Mr. Chairman, with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN SHULL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4286) for the relief of John Shull.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to John Shull, of Perry County, State of Pennsylvania, the sum of $300, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in payment for timber cut and used by the United States Topographical Survey in building and construction of a tower on the summit of the Tuscarora Mountain, in the State of Pennsylvania, for the use of the Government of the United States, in the year 1904.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This bill is to pay for timber cut by a topographic survey party and used in connection with their surveying work. I would like to ask any gentlemen of the House whether there is any provision in the law, or, if not, what the custom is where a topographic survey party goes upon timber lands, or where they need timber, in reference to cutting it? I think a good claim is made out here, absolutely unobjectionable, but I think there should be some provision governing a case like this.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not able to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois. I will say, however, when this matter came before the committee the parties notified the committee that these officers of the United States government told them that they had authority to cut down any timber that they wanted to cut, and the owner of the timber would have to make his claim against the Government of the United States, and any reasonable claim that was made would be paid. They went on and cut the timber. The party is here now, and he proved conclusively before the committee that his timber was of the value that is stated in this report.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me a remarkable proposition that the Geological Survey officials should go ahead and make this statement as to cutting timber, or cut timber at all, without any authority to pay for it, unless there is some provision of law covering the case.

Mr. CANDLER. The department have recommended the payment of the investigation made by them.

Mr. NORRIS. Do they admit cutting the timber?

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, yes; and the recommendation is made in accordance with the facts.

Mr. MANN. We have topographical survey parties all over the United States, and it is ridiculous to say that this is the only time such a question has arisen.

Mr. CANDLER. It is the only claim that has been presented.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have some one on the Committee on Public Lands or otherwise familiar with such cases to state how they authorize it.

Mr. CANDLER. They got permission from some people who owned the land and went across the line where they had not any permission.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES LENNIG & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9755) for the relief of Charles Lennig & Co.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $1,702.20 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse Charles Lennig & Co., Philadelphia, Pa., for damage to their works, due to the accidental explosion on August 6, 1902, of a quantity of cartridges at Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to have some information with reference to that bill. How was this injury brought about, and how was the explosion caused?

Mr. MILLER. Probably I can give the gentleman the information better by reading some parts of the report than by a brief explanation that could be made of it.

On August 6, 1902, an accident occurred at Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., causing the explosion of about 100,000 caliber .45 black-powder cartridges.

The arsenal had been engaged in breaking up condemned ammunition, and at this particular time the force was working on condemned caliber .45 ammunition loaded with black powder. The bullets were drawn from the cartridges in a building on the arsenal grounds, packing the shells containing the powder in empty boxes, and conveyed from this building to a point as remote as possible from other buildings and destroyed by placing the cartridges in 1,000 lots in a wire cage and setting fire to them by a slow match, the cage being used to prevent the dispersion of the shells by the explosion of the powder. Some days before the explosion in question the only cage on hand was worn out, and during the time to repair it more than the usual quantity of cartridges with drawn bullets were accumulated. Rather than run the risk of keeping these in the buildings, the foreman carried them to a place in the open near the location of the cage and there stacked them, awaiting the completion of the cage. About 100,000 rounds of cartridges had been accumulated. In the same open place it was the practice to haul daily to a dumping ground all refuse material, consisting of paper, shavings, and other combustibles, and burn it, under the supervision of a man specially detailed to watch it until the material is burned. On the afternoon of August 6 several loads of this material had been dumped at the usual place, but the fire that afternoon was not lighted, and no evidence of a fire on the dump was noticed by the teamster, but there must have been a fire smoldering under the ashes.

About 4 o'clock of that day a thunderstorm, accompanied by high winds, came up very suddenly. The wind blew the smoldering flames into action, lighted the pile of refuse material, and, as it happened to be blowing directly from this material toward the shells, an ignition of the latter was caused by burning fragments blown into them. An explosion resulted, destroying the entire lot of 100,000 cartridges, estimated to contain about 1,000 pounds of black powder. The effect of the explosion was to produce a crater in the ground of about 8 feet in diameter and 4 feet in depth. No material damage was done to the government buildings, as the strong wind blowing at the time was from the arsenal buildings and tended to protect them from the shock. Directly across the Frankford Creek from the spot where the explosion took place was the Tacony Chemical Works, owned and operated by Charles Lennig & Co.

A board of officers, appointed by the commanding officer, Maj. Frank Heath, found that the damages caused to the works of Charles Lennig & Co. by the explosion was $1,702.20. This amount was recommended to be paid by Brigadier-General Crozier, Chief of Ordnance, and Hon. Elihu Root, at that time Secretary of War. The committee believe that this amount should be paid to Charles Lennig & Co.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Just one question as to whether or not the proof showed that this explosion was the fault or negligence on the part of any Government employees.

Mr. MILLER. There was no negligence on the part of anyone. Everybody who knew the facts agreed that there was no negligence.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES H. DE COSTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5728) for the relief of James H. De Coster.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have that go over.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed without prejudice.

DAMAGE SUSTAINED NEAR FRANKFORD ARSENAL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12512) for the relief of persons who sustained damage by explosion near Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $10,348.55, being the sum found just by a board of officers convened at Frankford Arsenal on February 6, 1903, under post orders No. 4, issued by order of Maj. (now Lieut. Col.) Frank Heath, commanding officer of Frankford Arsenal, which sum is recommended by him, with the concurrence of the Secretary of War, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to pay the awards of said board according to the following schedule, as set forth in the said report of the board dated May 15, 1903, to wit: Mrs. Mary Altemus, $5.70; Mrs. Edward P. Ludy, $1; Mrs. Catherine Keely, $33.99; Mrs. Ella M. Newberry, $6; Mrs. Fannie K. Webster, $193.88; Mrs. Annie B. Hall, $576.46; Mr. E. F. Cooper, $163.20; Mr. Thomas McGee, $87.30; Mr. David Clark, $123.84; Mr. Oren N. Hillegas, $100.75; Mr. James Chatterton, $191.28; Mr. Charles H. Himmelwright, $85.38; Mrs. Dollie E. Banes, $40.85; Mrs. Pauline Voltz, $66.14; Mr. Charles Hanksterfer, $67; Mr. Anton Steeb, $51.92; Mr. William E. Hillegas, $3.80; Mr. Frank McMillan, $1.50; Mr. William E. McMillan, $19.06; Mr. Marshall W. Gold, $25.75; Mrs. Mary Hafer, $3.75; Mrs. Annie B. Hall (whose daughter, Ida W. Hall, aged 12 years, was struck by two small pieces of fuse, one piece penetrating cheek and striking tongue, the other penetrating leg), $1,000; Mrs. Peter McColgan (whose husband, Peter McColgan, aged 35 years, an Ordnance Department teamster, was instantly killed by the explosion of the fuses), $7,500.

SEC. 2. That the sum of $202.75, being the sum recommended by Lieut. Col. Frank Heath, commanding officer of Frankford Arsenal, and concurred in by the Secretary of War, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated to pay Miss Lena Foster, on account of injuries and damages sustained by reason of an explosion at Frankford Arsenal on the 12th day of August, 1903.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Lines 3 and 4, page 1, strike out the words "ten thousand three hundred and forty-eight dollars and fifty-five cents" and insert in place thereof the words "one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight dollars and fifty-five cents."

Page 1, at the end of line 11, insert the following words: "For damages to property."

Page 1, strike out all after the words "to wit," in line 14.

Page 1, strike out all of line 15 and all of page 2 and insert in the place thereof the following:

"Mary Altemus, $5.70; E. F. Cooper, $163.20; David Clark, $123.84; James Chatterton, $191.28; Marshall W. Gold, $25.75; Annie B. Hall, $576.46; Oren N. Hillegas, $100.75; Charles H. Himmelwright, $85.38; Charles Hanksterfer, $67; William E. Hillegas, $3.80; Mary Hafer, $3.75; Catherine Keely, $33.99; Edward P. Ludy, $1; Thomas McGee, $87.30; Frank McMillan, $1.50; William E. McMillan, $19.06; Ella M. Newberry, $6; Dollie E. Banes, $40.85; Anton Steeb, $51.92; Pauline Voltz, $66.14; Fannie K. Webster, $193.88."

Strike out all of page 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,848.55 in settlement of the above claims."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to object to the bill, but I wish to discuss it for a few minutes. I will only take a few moments. You will get to all the other claims.

Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, if there is any question of objection to be raised, let it be made now.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman may explain it so that I will not object.

Mr. FOULKROD. I think I can explain the bill so that the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not against the bill. The bill as originally introduced contained $7,500 for the death of a person in the government employ. I give the Committee on Claims credit for a great many of its acts, and I give it special credit in this case for striking out that provision of the bill. But I believe that the Committee on Claims did not have as much information as to the recommendations of the War Department as I perhaps can give it now. The Chief of Ordnance in making his recommendation stated that—

There are precedents for the action of Congress in case of accident such as this, for which relief legislation is recommended as follows:

"By joint resolution, approved June 18, 1902, $15,842.22 were appropriated for the relief of persons who sustained damage to property by the explosion of an ammunition chest in Chicago on July 16, 1894."

And Judge-Advocate-General Davis, a man of great care and experience, in his report on the bill made this statement:

On July 16, 1894, while Battery F, Second U. S. Artillery, was being actively employed in protecting property in the city of Chicago, Ill., an ammunition chest exploded. As a consequence of the explosion several enlisted men were killed and several persons, among them one civilian, were injured, and considerable injury was caused to buildings in the immediate vicinity. The amount of damage was ascertained by a board of officers convened for that purpose by the commanding general of the Department of the Missouri (see S. Ex. Doc. No. 21, 3d sess. 53d Cong.), and amounts representing the damage caused to buildings in the vicinity of the explosion were made the subject of legislative appropriation in the following enactment, which included a gratuity to Alice York for personal injuries to the extent of $305.

In the enactments cited it appears that some amounts, dependent upon the nature and extent of bodily injuries received, were paid to the persons injured.

Now, the whole basis of the claim for paying personal injuries, as recommended by the War Department, as an examination of the original bill discloses, was based upon the report and the law which followed it relating to the ammunition-chest explosion in Chicago in 1894. But, so far from that being the fact, the board appointed by the War Department at the time expressly refused to allow even loss of time. The Judge-Advocate-General refers to the case of Alice York, in which case there were $305 allowed and paid. Doctor's expenses and nurse expenses were claimed, and they struck out these items; six weeks' loss of time, $25.

The War Department board, so far from being a precedent for paying these personal injuries, as has been said, have established a precedent directly to the contrary. Neither the House nor the War Department itself at the time would recommend payment for medicines or for any loss of time. It only illustrates how these things grow up, however. Here was a claim where the matter had been raised and rejected, covering an expense of three or four hundred dollars, and a few years later we have the War Department recommending to the Committee on Claims, grounded upon this so-called "precedent," the payment of $7,500 for injuries, which, if allowed, would have created a precedent. I congratulate the committee that it was wise and keen enough to refuse to recommend it.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 14236) for the relief of the Merchants' National Bank, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I object to that bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas objects. The bill will be passed without prejudice.

BENJAMIN F. CURRY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 17171) for the relief of Benjamin F. Curry.

Mr. MANN. I ask to have that go over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be passed without prejudice.

AGNES M. HARRISON.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 21019) to reimburse Agnes M. Harrison, postmaster at Wheeler, Miss., for loss of money-order remittance.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the reimbursement of Agnes M. Harrison, postmaster at Wheeler, in the State of Mississippi, for money-order remittance lost in transit November 12, 1907, without fault on her part, the sum of $56.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

ADOLPHUS ERWIN WELLS.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10752) to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to muster Adolphus Erwin Wells, of North Carolina, as of Company E, Ninth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, said muster to date from the 16th of June, 1864, and to issue to said Adolphus Erwin Wells an honorable discharge from said service, to date from the mustering out of said regiment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there is no report on the bill.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, yes; there is.

Mr. MANN. I have the report that is here. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman should explain it. There is absolutely nothing in the report.

Mr. MACON. It recommends favorable action on the measure, does it not?

Mr. STAFFORD. There are no facts contained in the report.

Mr. MANN. We must have an explanation of it.

Mr. GORDON. I will ask that the evidence in the case be read, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman make a statement about it? We can not let the Military Committee get in the habit of reporting bills here without any statement of the facts upon which they are based.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I introduced that bill, and I can explain it. The applicant was enrolled and mustered by a recruiting officer who was killed before the papers were returned to headquarters. The papers were lost. Various comrades of this applicant filed affidavits to the effect that they were present. Even Confederate soldiers, who were in the Confederate service at the time, who saw him after he had been captured and while he was a prisoner, they have made affidavits to that effect, and the committee have simply failed to incorporate in their report the evidence setting out these facts.

Mr. MANN. Is there any report from the War Department on the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There was no military record, because of the facts which I have stated. This bill simply asks that the man be mustered. He enlisted in the service, and the recruiting officer was killed before the papers were returned to headquarters, as I have stated.

Mr. MANN. Then this is not only to get a man out of the army, but to put him in and get him out both?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There is no other way.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me, in a case of that sort, we are entitled to have the facts printed in the report.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will state that that J. B. Duckett, one of the comrades of this soldier, was mustered ten or fifteen years ago by a special act. I do not mean to say that the report was not filed in that case, but he has been on the pension rolls ten or fifteen years, and was with this soldier at the time he was captured and made prisoner, and makes affidavit to the fact.

Mr. MANN. That is a case which was passed upon before my service in Congress.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am satisfied that there were a great many mistakes made before the gentleman came to Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I think I will have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed without prejudice.

Subsequently,

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent of the House to go back to the bill (H. R. 10752) to complete the military record of Adolphus Erwin Wells. I understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will withdraw his objection until I can present the evidence in that case, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORDON] asks unanimous consent to recur to the bill H. R. 10752. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. I ask the Clerk to read the paper which I have sent to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the bill.

The bill was again read by the Clerk.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee has called it up for the purpose of supplying an omission in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to reserve the right to object. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORDON] is recognized, and the Clerk will read the document sent up by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The Clerk began the reading of the document.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this report be omitted and that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MANN. How long is it?

Mr. MILLER. It is quite long.

Mr. GORDON. About 4 pages of manuscript.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to be read, but I will not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the document be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The document is as follows:

NORTH CAROLINA, Buncombe County:

Personally appeared before me, W. E. Waldrop, a notary public in and for said county and State, Adolphus E. Wells, and made oath that I enlisted in Company E, Ninth Tennessee Cavalry, on the 16th day of June, 1864, at Sandymush, N. C., and was sworn into service by Manson J. Wells, under Andrew Scruggs as captain, and Joe Parson as colonel of said company and regiment, and served from the 16th day of June, 1864, until the close of the war. I was a recruiting officer for said company, and while on my way to my command at Knoxville, Tenn., with 18 men, I was fired upon near the state line mountain by an attachment of confederate soldiers, capturing 6 of my men, wounding 6, and 6 of them making their escape, and I later being captured and put in prison at Asheville, N. C., for eight months.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this December 24, 1907.

[SEAL.] W. E. WALDROP,
A Notary Public for said County and State.

STATE OF NORTH CAROLINA, Buncombe County, affiant:

Personally appeared before me, W. E. Waldrop, notary public in and for said county and State, James B. Duckett, affiant, being duly sworn, and deposes and says that he enlisted in Company E, Ninth Tennessee Cavalry, on or about 16th day of June, 1864, at Sandy Mush, N. C., and was sworn into service before Manson J. Wells, recruiting officer, under Andrew Scruggs, as captain, and Joe Parson, as colonel, of said regiment, and that he knows of his own personal knowledge that Adolphus E. Wells was also recruiting officer in said regiment; that he saw his recruiting papers, and saw him in discharge of his duty as such officer; and when on his way in company with said Adolphus E. Wells and 18 men, who had been recruited by him and Manson J. Wells, to their command, stationed at Knoxville, Tenn., were fired upon by Confederate soldiers near the North Carolina and Tennessee state line, but 12 of whom were captured, 6 of which number were wounded; 6 made their escape; and I later, together with Adolphus E. Wells, were captured. This occurred the 19th day of June, 1864.

The affiant further says that he was wounded and captured, and that said Adolphus E. Wells was captured, and that both of whom, with others, were carried to Asheville, where they were lodged in a Confederate prison for a period of nine months; that he knows and believes that at the time that he and Adolphus E. Wells were captured, that Manson J. Wells aforesaid was killed—it was so reported—and that he has never seen him since, and that he knows and believes that the recruiting papers were in his possession at that time; for that reason they were lost or destroyed by the Confederate soldiers aforesaid. The affiant further says that he has no interest in the pension that the said Adolphus E. Wells may obtain, that he has already been mustered and granted a discharge by the Secretary of War, under an act of Congress in 1895, and that he is now drawing a pension.

JAMES B. DUCKETT.

NORTH CAROLINA, Buncombe County:

Personally appeared before me, W. E. Waldrop, a notary public in and for said county and State, R. M. Boyd, and made oath that I enlisted in Company E, Ninth Tennessee Cavalry, on or about the 16th day of March, 1864, at Sandy Mush, N. C., and was sworn into service by Manson J. Wells, a recruiting officer, under Andrew Scruggs as captain and Joe Parson as colonel of said company and regiment, and I was sworn into service by a recruiting officer of said company and regiment on the last day of April, 1864; while on our way to our command at Knoxville, Tenn., we were fired upon near the North Carolina and Tennessee state line by the Confederate soldiers, wounding 6, capturing 6, and 6 of us making our escape, and I later being captured and placed in prison at Asheville, N. C., and in a short time I was put on duty as guard as a conscript, and I guarded Adolphus E. Wells while he was in prison at Asheville, N. C., and was present when he was fired upon by the Confederate soldiers. I know the above facts to be true of my own personal knowledge, and know that Adolphus E. Wells is entitled to a pension.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN O. KINNEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13244) to place upon the muster-in rolls the name of John O. Kinney.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to enter the name of John O. Kinney on the muster rolls of Company H, Fifty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer infantry, as of date September 3, 1862.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That John O. Kinney shall hereafter be held and considered to be entitled to all of the rights and benefits that he would be entitled to on account of military service, except pay, bounty, and other emoluments, if he had been continuously in the military service of the United States as a private of Company H, Fifty-third Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, from the 3d day of September, 1862, to the 14th day of November, 1862, and had been honorably discharged on the date last named herein for gunshot wound incurred in the line of duty."

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that in order to save time the objection to consideration of these bills should be made, if made at all, immediately after the bill is read. The Chair will inquire whether objection is made?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to reserve the right to object, in order to object intelligently, until the gentleman explains the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas reserves the right to object.

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, the circumstances in this case are unusual, considering the long lapse of time since it occurred. John O. Kinney joined a Massachusetts company September 3, 1862, and went into camp with the company in the town now known as Groton, Mass. He was in the service there, engaged in enlistment, being a man of a great deal of intelligence and capacity, and subsequently employed until about the 12th of October, when he was in bathing in a river in that town within the precincts of the camp and was shot. It was supposed to be while target practice was going on. That incapacitated him from further service, and he was taken to a hospital, where a surgeon attended him. The surgeon is now living and gives his affidavit, which is printed in this report. The company was sworn in about the 12th of October and placed on the muster rolls, but he being at that time in the hospital was unable to appear and be sworn in with them. But there is evidence that he was sworn in, and the names of some of the witnesses who were present at that time can also be given.

Now, along about the 1st of November, not recovering sufficiently to resume active duty, he was given leave of absence until the 14th day of November of that year. On the 14th day of November, not improving in health, unable to leave his home, an affidavit of his physician was procured.

Mr. MACON. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that this case is no better than the one just preceding this, the one advocated by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CRAWFORD], and I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed without prejudice.

Subsequently,

Mr. TIRRELL. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] objected to the consideration of the bill H. R. 13244 because the preceding bill had been objected to, and as that objection has been withdrawn, I ask unanimous consent that we may now take up H. R. 13244.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly evident that if we are to ask unanimous consent to recur to every bill that has been objected to, the unanimous-consent rule under which we are operating will be knocked in the head. I therefore object.

Mr. TIRRELL. Will the gentleman permit me to state that the reason this bill was objected to was because the preceding bill was objected to, and that objection has been withdrawn?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very sorry I did not object to that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can make his request after we get through with the calendar.

R. J. WARREN.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21058) for the relief of R. J. Warren.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $594.60, or so much thereof as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury was properly incurred, to R. J. Warren, of Aberdeen, Miss., for expenses incident to defending an indictment made in Franklin County, Ala., and in the United States court at Huntsville, Ala., against said R. J. Warren, charging him with the murder of Houston Vines, while said Warren as a United States marshal was attempting to make an arrest of said Vines for violation of the internal-revenue laws of the Government.

The following committee amendment was read:

In lines 4 and 5 strike out the words "five hundred and ninety-four" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four hundred and ninety-nine."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLIDAY. I do not want to take up the time of the committee, but I would like to ask an explanation.

Mr. CANDLER. This man Warren was a deputy United States marshal, and in arresting certain distillers they were fired upon and returned the fire. Warren was afterwards charged with murder, arrested, and tried, and this is to reimburse him for the expenses of the trial.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HARTSHORNE, OKLA.

The next business was the bill (S. 4289) for the relief of the people of Hartshorne, Okla.

The bill was read.

Mr. HACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask that that go over.

The bill was ordered to be passed without prejudice.

ROBERT MORGAN GILSON.

The next business was the bill (S. 3952) to restore to the active list of the United States Marine Corps the name of Robert Morgan Gilson.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall reserve the right to object until I hear an explanation of why we should increase the Marine Corps by one officer.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, we are doing that every day. They had an examination the other day where 150 young men, or about that number, took an examination to fill something like 60 vacancies in the Marine Corps.

Mr. SLAYDEN. This is not to fill a vacancy, I will say to the gentleman, but it is to make an additional officer.

Mr. BUTLER. It will add an additional number if restored, and if the gentleman from Texas will permit me to add to the answer of the gentleman from Vermont, the officers of the navy insist on retaining the Marine Corps at its present number, and, furthermore, the department has asked in a letter that this young man should be restored to the service as an additional number.

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is exactly the point upon which I was basing my objection, that it is to make an additional officer. I shall object.

The bill was ordered to be passed without prejudice.

WILLIAM JONDRON.

The next business was the bill (S. 2712) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and cancel the allotment of William Jondron, Yankton Sioux allottee, should it prove to be fictitious.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to investigate the allotment made in the name of William Jondron, Yankton Sioux allottee No. 1147, and if it be shown to his satisfaction that no such person as William Jondron was in existence at the time the Yankton Indians were allotted he is hereby authorized and directed to cancel the patent issued in the name of William Jondron and also the record of the allotment in his name, and to reallot the lands covered thereby to a member or members of the Yankton tribe who were entitled to allotments, but failed to receive land when the Indians of the said tribe were allotted lands in severalty.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HACKETT. Mr. Chairman, the bill itself is self-explanatory. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior may investigate the case of the allotment. It has been alleged that there was a fraudulent allotment to this party, that there is no such person in existence, and that the Secretary without law has no power to determine that question. This bill is to authorize him to investigate, and if he finds there was a fraudulent allotment he will cancel the patent.

Mr. FERRIS. Is there any provision in the act to allot to any other individual?

Mr. HACKETT. No; not to an individual, but to the tribe.

Mr. FERRIS. Then, as I understand it, the bill purports to investigate a fraudulent allotment, and if found fraudulent to return it to the tribe?

Mr. HACKETT. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELI PETTIJOHN.

The next business was House resolution 414, referring to the Court of Claims the claim of Eli Pettijohn.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. 11128) for the relief of Eli Pettijohn, now pending in the House of Representatives, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887; that the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of said act and report to the House of Representatives in accordance therewith their findings of fact and law, and especially the value of the property taken from the said Eli Pettijohn by the United States, and whether said Pettijohn's claim is or was properly against the United States or against one Franklin Steele or some other person or corporation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whether the gentleman would accept an amendment striking out that portion of the resolution which directs the court how to proceed, that all being now covered by law. I would suggest that we strike out all after the word "seven," in line 8.

Mr. MILLER. I would have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "seven," in line 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

NEBRASKA MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 5573) for the relief of the Nebraska Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Stromsburg, Nebr.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to ask that that bill go over.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman would withhold his objection until I have made an explanation.

Mr. MANN. Very well; I shall reserve the right to object.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill that passed the House two years ago and went to the Senate, but too late to be passed by the Senate. I do not understand that there is any serious objection to the bill. I have never heard any urged that was of sufficient importance to deserve serious consideration.

Mr. MANN. I will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who has peculiar jurisdiction over matters of this sort, has reported against the bill and advised against its passage. I should consider that quite a serious objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is true, Mr. Chairman; but, nevertheless, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at no place gives any reason why it should not be passed, and there is an abundance of reason why any man can see its passage is justified. It was a life insurance company organized under the laws of the State of Nebraska, not for profit, but as a mutual-benefit life insurance company. It was organized in the year 1898.

And that year the assessments which were levied were largely spent in paying agents, in establishing agencies. There were no losses in the years 1898 or 1899 to speak of. In that year the Spanish-American war occurred. Under the law which was then enacted, a levy was made for Spanish-American taxes against this company upon the theory that it was for profit and not for mutual benefit alone. Afterwards it was abundantly shown by testimony, voluminously given in this report, that it was not a company for profit, but strictly for mutual benefit, as shown by the certificate of Mr. Searle, auditor of public accounts, who says specifically in his certificate that said life insurance company was organized for mutual protection to its members without any profit. Now, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue gives the only reason why he could not recommend the passage of this bill, that the commissioner under whom the decision had been made in the first place had gone out of office, and under the practice obtaining there a subsequent commissioner would not reverse the action of the former commissioner, as it was against the law, as I understand, and therefore they had no recourse except to come to Congress.

Now, he does not give a reason why this bill should not pass. It is only $1,471, and unquestionably this levy of taxes ought to be refunded, and I do not think that an arbitrary objection should be made, but let the matter come up on its merits.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the gentleman refers to the objection as an arbitrary one. Without discussing the bill at this time, I simply read this language from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, which department made the levy:

The question of the liability of this company to tax was very carefully considered in this office before the assessment was made. After payment of the taxes and the presentation of the claim for refunding the question was again carefully considered, and the claim was rejected on March 1, 1902. Subsequently arguments were heard on the question of reopening and reconsidering the claim, and a reconsideration was denied. I am satisfied that the tax was legally assessed and made, and therefore can not recommend the passage of the pending bill.

The gentleman may call it an arbitrary objection, but after it has been three times considered by an officer of the Government whose duty it is to consider these things, giving three different considerations to it, and he objected to it, I do not think the gentleman can say the objection here is arbitrary.

Mr. HINSHAW. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would consider that the reply given by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was worthy of consideration if he would give one single fact in refutation of the argument for the return of this money and the evidence produced in the case, but he simply states that it having been considered and rejected, it was reconsidered and rejected, and he could not see any reason to recommend it. But in no place does he show why the tax should have been levied, and no place does he give a valid and good reason why it should not be recommended for return.

Mr. MANN. It is not a custom of the department, in reply to the Committee on Claims, to argue the case, and it is not their province to do it. I assume the facts were properly submitted to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. If they were not then presented to the commissioner, then they could not be considered. If they were presented to the commissioner, they were either considered or the commissioner failed in the performance of his duty; but having been presented to him three times, I assume they presented the case to the best of their ability.

Mr. HINSHAW. The commissioner said he had no power to reconsider the claim because he was a subsequently appointed commissioner to the one who adjudicated the claim in the first place. Whether that be the law or not I am not advised. Now, I submit that proof is made here, which is shown in this report and is full enough to justify action. Here is a report of many pages carefully collated and collected. The report was made by Mr. WALDO, of New York, and I suppose there never was as complete a case made out as this, and in all justice I would like to have this bill passed and not go over, for if it goes over I fear it will not get consideration this session. These people have been out of this money for ten years. They ask no interest, but just the return of the original amount, and it does seem to me it is a matter of mere justice.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I feel obliged to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the bill will be passed without prejudice.

RICHARD HALEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10714) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to enroll Richard Haley and his family as Choctaw Indians.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that the Secretary of the Interior made a recommendation against this bill. What is the necessity for it? For the present I will object.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. I would suggest that the chairman of the committee might explain it. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], I understand, is sick.

Mr. MANN. There never has been a bill like this passed while I have been here. I think it would be vetoed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects, and the bill will be passed without prejudice.

CLAIMS OF SHAWNEE INDIANS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 17191) to confer jurisdiction, legal and equitable, upon the Court of Claims in the matter of the claims of certain Shawnee Indians to be enrolled as Cherokees under the treaty of July 19, 1866, agreement of June 7, 1869, the act of October 1, 1890, and decrees of the courts thereunder, and for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that this bill go over.

ROBERT S. DAME.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21895) for the relief of Robert S. Dame and others, and for other purposes.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE] objects.

Mr. PRINCE. I do not object. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. To save the gentleman trouble, I will object. It is an omnibus bill, presented at the last session of Congress, and has no business to be brought up now.

CLARA A. CARTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 20204) for the relief of Clara A. Carter, widow of Martin J. Carter, late consul of the United States to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Clara A. Carter, the widow of Martin J. Carter, late consul of the United States to Yarmouth, Nova Scotia, who died at his post of duty on the 9th day of October, 1905, the sum of $861.11, being the balance of one year's salary.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania, the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES A. GALBRAITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 870) for the relief of the heirs of James A. Galbreaith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs of James A. Galbreaith, late collector of internal revenue for the eastern district of Tennessee, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500.

Also the following amendments:

Page 1, correct spelling of name in title and in the bill from "Galbreaith" to "Galbraith."

Page 1, at the end of line 7, add the words "in full settlement of all claims."

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what this $500 is to be paid for?

Mr. MILLER. In the settlement of the accounts of this man they kept out $500 more than they ought to have kept out, and this is simply to pay him what he ought to have been paid when the settlement was made.

Mr. MACON. That is all I want to know.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HERMAN LEHMANN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2635) for the relief of Herman Lehmann.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Herman Lehmann $128 for the loss of personal property sustained by him while in the service of the United States as clerk in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, by reason of the burning of the Government warehouse at Seattle, Wash., on May 7, 1906. The above-named appropriation shall be in full for all claims against the United States Government.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object so the gentleman can explain what the property was that was destroyed.

Mr. MILLER. This is a claim for unliquidated damages to the amount of $128.

Mr. MACON. What kind of property was destroyed, and how?

Mr. BONYNGE. It consisted of bed springs, beds and clothing, and personal property of that description, and the department recommended the payment.

Mr. MACON. On what theory is the Government liable?

Mr. MILLER. Let me read what the report says:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, April 29, 1908.

Respectfully returned to the Secretary of War, H. R. 2635, Sixtieth Congress, first session, a bill for the relief of Herman Lehmann, for payment of $128 for loss of personal property by reason of the burning of the government warehouse at Seattle, Wash., May 7, 1906, with information that the records of this office show that a claim was filed by Herman Lehmann June 7, 1906, amounting to $128, and was returned to him June 12, 1906, with information that his claim, being one for "unliquidated damages," is not possible of settlement by this or any other department of the Government. Congress alone can grant relief in this matter.

This bill is similar to S. 2489, Sixtieth Congress, first session, for the relief of Harry G. Rupp, and S. 4426, Sixtieth Congress, first session, for the relief of Thomas C. Clark, on both of which this office recommended favorable consideration.

Mr. MACON. Under what circumstances was this property in the government warehouse?

Mr. BONYNGE. He was a civil employee of the Quartermaster-General, and had to have his property there. I will say that this Congress had passed a bill for another person who had property destroyed at the same time and under exactly the same circumstances and by the same fire.

Mr. MACON. Was not the Government accommodating this gentleman by sheltering his property free of charge?

Mr. MILLER. The report also says:

It is the opinion of this office that this also is a just claim, and it is recommended that it be favorably considered by Congress.

Mr. BONYNGE. Congress has passed numerous bills covering similar cases.

Mr. MILLER. Of exactly the same kind.

Mr. BONYNGE. And one for a loss occasioned by the same fire, and this Congress has passed such a bill.

Mr. MACON. The proposition that staggers me in connection with appropriations of this kind is this: Why should the Government, when it meets with an accidental loss of a warehouse by fire, an arsenal by explosion, or a light-house by the ravages of a cyclone or by any other act that it has nothing to do with and is in no wise responsible for, be called upon to reimburse any and everybody who may unfortunately have had property destroyed in and about the building that was burned, the arsenal that was blown up by an explosion, or the light-house that was destroyed by a cyclone? I can not get it into my mind fairly and squarely, to save my life, as to why the Government should be responsible for losses of that kind.

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MACON. I would like to have an explanation from the gentleman from Kansas in regard to this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the gentleman from Arkansas objecting?

Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object, and I want to object intelligently, if I object at all. The explanation of the gentleman in charge of the bill will control my action in regard to the matter. I do not want to object captiously or ignorantly upon this or any other question coming before the House for consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood you to have yielded the floor.

Mr. MACON. But I reserved the right to object before doing so.

Mr. MILLER. I have yielded the floor to the gentleman from Illinois, who will explain the bill.

Mr. MANN. I will not take very much time. I can assure gentlemen that they will have opportunity to reach every unobjected bill, as well as the other bills, during the afternoon.

This man was ordered on travel by the Government. He is a government employee. He was required to make the trip. The Government furnished him transportation. If he had been on a railroad and the baggage had been in a railroad baggage office and had been burned, the railroad would have been responsible to him for his baggage. In this case his baggage was in the quartermaster's office.

Mr. MACON. But, if the gentleman will allow me to interrupt him, I will say that if the railroad had been compensated by the passenger by the payment of transportation over its line that would have entitled him to store his property in the railroad warehouse.

Mr. MANN. The Government is supposed to be compensated—I would not say it was always so—by the services of the employee, and the travel, because that is part of his employment. While there is no legal liability, it would seem that the Government might fairly, where it required a man to travel, in its own vehicles, to deposit his baggage in its own warehouse, travel on its own ship—that the Government might properly, in a case presented to Congress, assume voluntarily such liability as a railroad would be compelled to assume legally.

Mr. MACON. But ought he to deposit his property in a government warehouse free of charge and expect the Government to reimburse him for property lost through no fault of or negligence on the part of the Government?

Mr. MANN. Because there is no other way he could do. It had been carried there by the Government; he did not deposit it personally. The Government deposited it in the transportation of the man and his baggage.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. It was a government warehouse, was it not?

Mr. MANN. Yes; it was properly deposited for the purpose of putting it on board ship. The man was on travel, and it seems to me that the Government might do voluntarily that which a corporation would be required to do whether it desired to do it or not.

Mr. BONYNGE. And especially in such a case as this, where the loss has been paid to others who lost in the same fire. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MACON. The gentleman is not going to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist on his objection?

Mr. MACON. I withdraw the objection, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection is withdrawn, and without objection the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

WILLIS A. JOY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6903) for the relief of Willis A. Joy.

The bill was read.

Mr. MANN. I ask that that go over.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and under the rule the bill will go over without prejudice.

AUGUSTUS BANNIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 16191) to refund certain moneys paid into the Treasury of the United States through mistake by Augustus Bannigan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to repay to Augustus Bannigan the sum of $419, paid into the Treasury of the United States by mistake by the said Augustus Bannigan, and which said money has been placed to the credit of pension appropriations for 1893, 1894, and 1895.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "nineteen" and insert "fourteen."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MACON. Reserving the right to object, I would like an explanation made of the mistake.

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MACON. I would like to know how it was paid in by mistake.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it will give me great pleasure to explain to the gentleman from Arkansas and the other Members of the House how the mistake occurred. This man was a soldier in the army during the entire civil war. After having served during the entire term of the civil war he was discharged from the army. He then reenlisted in the Regular Army and was sent to one of the western posts. Being a young man, the humdrum life of the army post did not appeal to him, and he deserted and came home. Now, having been severely wounded, he made an application for a pension. He did not state in his pension application that he had had any other service, hiding the fact that he was a deserter.

A pension was allowed to him, but somebody told him that his subsequent desertion disbarred him from receiving a pension. The fact preyed upon his mind, and he returned to the Secretary of the Interior his pension certificate and all the money that he had drawn under that pension certificate.

Mr. MANN. The fact is, he ought to be given a medal as an honor man.

Mr. MACON. Yes; the gentleman's statement is sufficient.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "Bannigan," in line 4, the words "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. MILLER. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] to withdraw his objection?

Mr. MACON. Yes; I just wanted an explanation about that mistake.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, after "Bannigan," insert "out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARK S. GORRILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18744) for the relief of the estate of Mark S. Gorrill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the estate of Mark S. Gorrill, late of Methuen, Mass., duplicates in lieu of United States 4 per cent bonds of the funded loan of 1907, or to pay to the estate of Mark S. Gorrill the principal and interest due upon said bonds, described as follows: Registered bonds Nos. 13827, for $500; and 25094, 25095, 25096, 25097, 25098, and 25099, for $1,000 each, inscribed in the name of Mark S. Gorrill, amounting to $6,500; and upon coupon bonds Nos. 12501, 14782, and 34015, for $500 each, amounting to $1,500, with interest coupons attached, dated April 1, 1895, and subsequently, said registered and coupon bonds having been lost: Provided, That the legal representatives of said estate shall first file in the Treasury a bond in the penal sum of $12,500, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with condition to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the said bonds and interest coupons.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

W. H. BLUROCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19839) for the relief of W. H. Blurock.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $185 to W. H. Blurock, for property destroyed by fire at Arlington dock, Seattle, Wash., on May 6, 1906.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the word "sixth" and insert in lieu thereof the word "seventh."

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how the Government is responsible for the destruction of this property?

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is of the same character as the bill of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE].

Mr. MANN. It is not the same fire, and I am not sure that it is of the same character.

Mr. JONES of Washington. He was a civil employee in the quartermaster's office.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JONES of Washington. This is the same fire—May 7, 1906. This man was a civil employee in the Quartermaster-General's office, and it is for the loss of his personal effects which were destroyed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE W. WICKES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18639) for the relief of George W. Wickes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas George W. Wickes, a born member of the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians failed, through ignorance of his rights, to avail himself of the allotments and benefits granted by the United States to the members of his tribe under certain treaties made between the said Pottawatomie tribe of Indians and the United States and has at no time received any moneys, land, or other property from the United States; and

Whereas the said George W. Wickes served faithfully in defense of the Union as a private soldier in the civil war and received an honorable discharge therefrom; and

Whereas the said George W. Wickes is now aged and infirm and unable to earn a livelihood for himself and family; and

Whereas all property and moneys formerly held by the United States under certain treaties, in trust for the said Pottawatomie tribe and the members thereof, have been distributed, and there now remains in the hands of the United States no moneys or property of any kind due to said tribe or any member thereof: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allot to the said George W. Wickes and his two children, out of any lands being a part of the unappropriated public domain of the United States, 160 acres each, to be selected by the said George W. Wickes, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue to each of said persons a patent in fee simple for the said lands so allotted, the same to be in lieu of all allotments, moneys, and annuities which the said parties should have received as members of said tribe and in full settlement of all claims of the said George W. Wickes and his said children against the United States.

The following committee amendments were read:

Amend by striking out the preamble.

Amend page 2, line 6, by inserting after the words "United States" the words "and subject to homestead entry."

Amend page 2, line 10, by striking out the words "in fee simple."

Amend by adding, after line 14, on page 2, the following:

"The patent that shall issue herewith to George W. Wickes shall be in fee simple. The patents that shall issue to each of the two children shall be of the legal effect and shall declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted for the period of time preceding the years of majority of each child, and the date fixed in each patent by the United States as the true date of majority for each child shall be held as the true date of majority for the carrying out of the provisions of this act."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to hear an explanation of this.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, under the treaty of the United States with the Pottawatomie Indians, November 15, 1861, the Secretary of the Interior was authorized to allot to members of the tribe 160 acres of land. George W. Wickes was a member of the tribe. He was not enrolled until after all the lands of the tribe had been disposed of. He was in the civil war—enlisted, I think, in 1863, in Colorado, and served for two or three years. He knew nothing about his rights until the property had been disposed of. He had been regularly enlisted. The surplus land belonging to the tribe had been otherwise disposed of before he knew about it.

Mr. MURDOCK. Was Wickes with his tribe at the time the lands were disposed of?

Mr. BONYNGE. No.

Mr. FERRIS. But by this bill I understand the land is to go to him in fee simple, and if there are no restrictions as in the case of other Indians——

Mr. BONYNGE. No; they were given their lands in fee simple. The bill provides that 160 acres of the land shall be given to him in fee simple, but as to the children——

Mr. FERRIS. The part of the band in your State may have been released from restrictions, but all over my State are numerous Indians of the same tribe that are under restrictions.

Mr. BONYNGE. The Pottawatomie tribe got their land in fee simple.

Mr. FERRIS. Not in my State. I get letters from some of them almost every day desiring their restrictions removed.

Mr. BONYNGE. I am quite certain that the report from the Secretary shows that they got their land in fee simple.

Mr. FERRIS. I am not disputing the gentleman on that particular band.

Mr. BONYNGE. The Secretary says, as shown by the report:

The third article of the treaty provided that whenever the President of the United States was satisfied that any male adults who were heads of families and who were allotted under the provisions of the foregoing article were sufficiently intelligent and prudent to control their affairs and interests, he might, at the request of such persons, cause the lands held by them in severalty to be conveyed to them in fee simple with power of alienation, etc.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true under the Burton Act in regard to all Indians. But that calls for a discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BONYNGE. In this case, where this man had been in the service of the Government of the United States in defense of the Union, and has been living away from his tribe supporting his family, surely there would be no contention on the part of the gentleman that he is not sufficiently intelligent under that provision of the law to have the land allotted to him in fee simple.

Mr. FERRIS. The only objection I desire to make, and all I see, is that if this bill passes and lets these Indians have these lands in fee simple when other Indians of the same tribe are restricted as not competent to transact their own affairs——

Mr. BONYNGE. That is only in cases where they are not competent.

Mr. FERRIS. It is my belief that if we give them the land in fee simple they will not remain in the hands of these Indians long.

Mr. MANN. May I ask when these lands were allotted to the tribe?

Mr. BONYNGE. I think I can tell the gentleman in a moment.

Mr. MANN. I judge they were allotted under the act of 1887 and under previous acts. At the time of that allotment I suppose any unborn children would not be considered in the allotment. Now, what are the ages of these children?

Mr. BONYNGE. One is 14 and the other is 16.

Mr. MANN. How does the gentleman figure out that those children are now entitled to an allotment because their father did not take an allotment twenty years ago? If he had taken the allotment then, they claim he would not be entitled to one now.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman is wrong as to the date, because the Secretary, in his letter printed in the report of the committee, says this:

It does not appear that George W. Wickes made application for an allotment prior to the conclusion of the work and the opening of the surplus lands to public settlement.

Mr. MANN. I also read from the report, from the letter of the Secretary:

After the passage of the act of February 8, 1887, it was held that the citizen band of Pottawatomie Indians were entitled to allotments under that act without payment of the cost of the land, and that each member of the band who was allotted under the provisions of the treaties hereinbefore referred to and their descendants were entitled to allotments in the Indian Territory.

That is the last provision for making allotments.

Mr. BONYNGE. There were previous allotments to that.

Mr. MANN. Very well. That was twenty years ago. Now, if the old gentleman had taken an allotment at that time, that would have settled the thing. Because he did not get one then and did not apply for one, the gentleman now tries to get him and his two minor children——

Mr. BONYNGE. No; his children would have had the allotment because——

Mr. MANN. Then, all the children of all these other people who have taken allotments are now entitled to allotments.

Mr. BONYNGE. No; the report says:

Had George W. Wickes appeared as a member of the tribe at the time of the allotting of lands to the Pottawatomie Indians and the distribution of the tribal property, he would have received his share of the tribal property in all probability, and in addition to this would have received an allotment of land. The same is true with regard to the two children, and it is proper to state that both children were born prior to the final allotments of the land allotted to the Pottawatomie Indians—

Mr. MANN. They were born prior to the final allotments.

Mr. HACKETT. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to this bill.

The bill was ordered to be passed without prejudice.

WILLIAM PARKER SEDGWICK.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 22017) for the relief of William Parker Sedgwick and others, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, that bill was passed and has no place on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. I shall have to object.

The bill was ordered to be passed without prejudice.

Mr. BUTLER. It was passed the other day.

MARY S. FERGUSSON.

The next business was the bill (S. 6529) for the relief of Mary S. Fergusson.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Mary S. Fergusson, widow of Arthur W. Fergusson, late executive secretary of the Philippine Islands, who died January 30, 1908, in the service of the Government, the sum of $4,500, being the amount of salary for six months.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, and I would like to have some explanation. The bill apparently creates a precedent for paying a gratuity out of the United States Treasury.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this is a Senate bill and can not, I think, be held to threaten a dangerous precedent, for the reasons set forth in the report which I drew on the bill. I read from page 4 of the report:

During the eight years of arduous, laborious services in the Philippines, Mr. Fergusson took only six months' vacation. More than once he requested leave of absence to recuperate his wasted energies, but each time his superiors felt that his services could not be spared, and so he remained at his post until at last nature succumbed and he fell dead, a martyr to duty. His widow and one child survive him.

To few men is ever given the power and the opportunity in time of peace to render services so illustrious as were those of Arthur Fergusson to the Philippines and the United States.

There need be no fear that the appropriation provided for in the accompanying bill will serve as a precedent for any subsequent appropriation until some other public servant, combining in himself the capacity for labor, the energy, the devotion to duty, the charm of personality of Arthur Fergusson, and blessed with his rare genius, shall die as he died and leave as noble a record.

Mr. Chairman, I wrote that out of the fullness of my own knowledge, and in accordance with the uncontradicted testimony of every man competent to judge who knew Arthur Fergusson. I call attention to the statements concerning him made by the Philippine Commission, by Secretary Taft, by John Bassett Moore, by Judge Gray, formerly of the United States Supreme Court, and by other eminent men.

Mr. OLLIE M. JAMES. What is the amount of this?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Four thousand five hundred dollars. I move to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman desires further information, I would be glad to give it.

Mr. MANN. I should have to object or to reserve the right to object until I get further information. I wish enlightenment, and the gentleman from Wisconsin is able to give it. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. This is a proposition to pay this man six months' salary out of the Treasury of the United States. Out of what fund was the man's salary paid?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Paid by the Filipino government.

Mr. MANN. Then I think the Filipino government had better pay the gratuity.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The services of Arthur Fergusson were services for the United States, although rendered in the Philippines. It is not too much to say, Mr. Chairman, that in the opinion of the Filipino commission, of Secretary Taft, of the present Secretary of War, General Wright, and of the Filipinos themselves, these were services which no man in the world could have rendered except Arthur Fergusson.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I want to emphasize this point: The services of this man were not alone for the Philippine government, but also, and in an especial degree, for the Government of the United States. When war was on he went among the Filipinos, talked to them, interpreted speeches from English into idiomatic Spanish and Spanish speeches into idiomatic eloquent English with an accuracy, grace, force, and fluency absolutely unrivaled.

The Philippine Commission say:

The value of the services rendered by him in the various provinces for the purpose of establishing civil government can not be adequately measured at this date. His interpretations were clothed with the true feelings of the commission, and bred a trust in the United States and its beneficent policy which smoothed away a thousand difficulties and made possible that harmony and good understanding without which the solution of a very difficult problem would have been impossible.

He was the interpreter of the International American Conference of 1889, of the International Railways Commission of 1891, and secretary of the International Monetary Commission. He served the United States on the Chilean Claims Commission, the United States-Venezuelan Commission, and was the official interpreter to the American negotiators of the treaty of Paris. Each one of those negotiators, Senator FRYE or Justice Day, of the Supreme Court, or any of their associates, will say that they could not have carried out these negotiations in the successful manner in which they were carried out had it not been for Arthur Fergusson's wonderful ability as an interpreter.

The organ of the Spaniards in the Philippines who were hostile to us, El Progreso, wrote of Mr. Fergusson in 1902:

More than an interpreter, Mr. Fergusson is an orator; for in the campaign of propaganda of the civil commission, so tirelessly carried out, not only in the regular sessions in Manila, but also in the most distant provinces of the archipelago, he did not limit his efforts to the simple phonographic (we find no more appropriate word to express our idea) reproduction of the convincing arguments of Mr. Taft; but, identified with his policy of forgetfulness and confidence, he gave to those memorable speeches that brought about such marvelous results in the pacification of the country the picturesque color of the Latin oratory, poetizing with the rhythm of our tongue the dry Saxon laconism.

For us here Mr. Fergusson has been the valued and never to be forgotten assistant of the civil commission.

I hope that the gentleman will not press his point, because this would not establish a precedent for anything of the kind——

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the bill will be passed without prejudice.

J. N. NEWKIRK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21167) to reimburse J. N. Newkirk, postmaster of San Diego, Cal., for moneys lost by burglary.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to repay to J. N. Newkirk, postmaster at San Diego, Cal., the sum of $234.17, to reimburse him for key-deposit funds lost by burglary on February 26, 1906.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Dakota rise?

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from North Dakota——

The CHAIRMAN. But for what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MANN. I think we had better get through the calendar first.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from North Dakota?

Mr. GRONNA. To refer back to bill 1091, which is identically the same——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent that the committee recur to Calendar No. 1091, and the Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. MANN. Until we get through with the Calendar.

EARL E. WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 14345) for the relief of Earl E. White.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Earl E. White the sum of $64.65, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse him for money stolen from the post-office at West Brooklyn, Ill., on the night of June 2, 1907, by burglars, the said White being at that time the postmaster at West Brooklyn, Ill., and having refunded to the Post-Office Department (upon demand) the amount of money so stolen.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID BRINTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10697) for the relief of David Brinton.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay and reimburse David Brinton, postmaster at Timicula, Chester County, Pa., in the sum of $12.73 for postage-due stamps, etc., stolen from said post-office on the 7th day of April, 1907.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

E. L. SIMPSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3844) for the relief of E. L. Simpson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to E. L. Simpson the sum of $88.90, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse him for money stolen from the post-office at Carrollton, Ill., on the night of January 2, 1897, by burglars, the said Simpson being at that time the postmaster at Carrollton, Ill., and having refunded to the Post-Office Department (upon demand) the amount of money so stolen.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POSTMASTER AT SANDBORN, IND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19762) to reimburse the postmaster at Sandborn, Ind.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay John Anderson, postmaster at Sandborn, Ind., $463.99, being the amount burglarized from the post-office safe at said place February 18, 1907, the circumstances of which burglary being beyond the postmaster's control.

Also the following amendment was read:

In lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "four hundred and sixty-three dollars and ninety-nine" and insert in lieu thereof the words "four hundred and fifty dollars and forty-three."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

There was no objection.

E. J. REED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4307) for the relief of E. J. Reed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to E. J. Reed, postmaster at Danby, Vt., the sum of $301.20, the sum of money and stamps stolen from the post-office at Danby, Vt., on the 29th day of April, 1906, without any fault on his part.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

CLARK COUNTY, KY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 18417) for the relief of Clark County, Ky.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the county of Clark, State of Kentucky, the sum of $2,727.05, to reimburse said county for the building of a bridge across Howards Creek in said county.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MURDOCK. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear an explanation.

Mr. MILLER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, this bill involves the question of the obligation of the United States Government to make reimbursement of damages resulting from public improvements. It provides that Clark County, Ky., be reimbursed for the expenses incurred by it, amounting to $2,720.05, in building a bridge across Howards Creek in that county, which was rendered necessary by the backwater from a government dam across the Kentucky River. Howards Creek is a small stream which was easily crossed on horseback and in vehicles before the dam was built. It being impossible to cross it in that manner after the dam was built, the county erected this bridge. The amount carried by the bill is the actual cost of the bridge, as certified by the county officials, who are corroborated by the report of Major Warren, in charge of the Corps of Engineers, Cincinnati, Ohio. This report was approved by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army, who has recommended the passage of the bill. There are precedents for the proposed action, one of which can be found in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1905, on page 1134, volume 33, of the United States Statutes at Large, part 1.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY], I want to read what the Chief of Engineers says in reference to it:

Inasmuch as the building of this bridge was made practically a necessity by the construction of the government dam, I am of the opinion that the claim of the county is a just one, and that the bill should receive favorable consideration. It is understood that the sum named in the bill is the actual amount expended by the county in building the bridge and approaches.

I ask that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

The bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FREDERIC WILLIAM SCOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 19636) for the relief of Frederic William Scott.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Frederic William Scott, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $54.05, the amount of excess tariff paid the collector of customs at Richmond, Va., upon the importation of one oil painting and frame during the month of October, 1905.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALBERT R. HEILIG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10701) for the relief of Albert R. Heilig.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Albert R. Heilig the sum of $750.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask for what purpose is this to be paid out? The bill does not say.

Mr. MANN. This is one of those cases—while the gentleman is looking for the facts—where a man was required to deposit money for a certificate, as is required by the department. He deposited an amount of money and received the certificate which, under the law, was supposed to be used in payment to the Government for the land. But it was discovered that he was not required to deposit the money in the first place, and hence the certificate was really not to be used in paying for the land.

Mr. MACON. This is paying back that which should not have been paid?

Mr. MANN. That is it, and this is paying it back.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

GEORGE J. MILLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9969) for the relief of George J. Miller, of Wenatchee, Wash.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to George J. Miller, of Wenatchee, Wash., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $400, that being the sum which the Acting Commissioner of the General Land Office, in a decision dated September 24, 1900, found to be due him, but which was not repaid to him because neither said commissioner nor the Secretary of the Interior had power to make such repayment, being money which said Miller, acting on the erroneous advice of the register of the United States Land Office, paid to the United States for government land which he was later held to be entitled to receive as a homestead without such payment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to strike out lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

STANLEY E. BROWN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1097) for the relief of Stanley E. Brown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to Stanley E. Brown the sum of $141.98, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for services rendered in the office of the collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of Kentucky in the year 1901.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 5, strike out the word "forty-one" and insert in place thereof the word "thirty-nine."

Line 5, strike out the word "ninety-eight" and insert in place thereof the word "thirteen."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object in order to get an explanation from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MILLER. Hon. George B. Cortelyou, Secretary of the Treasury, states that in equity Mr. Brown should be paid $139.13, compensation at the rate of $1,000 per annum, and your committee therefore favorably report the bill as amended, with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Brown performed service——

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN (continuing). In the office which was not regularly authorized by the department. The services were necessary to be performed, and he supposed that authority had been granted.

Mr. MACON. But there was no law authorizing it at that time?

Mr. MANN. No; at that time the department had not authorized it, but they recommend the payment.

Mr. MACON. I have no objection.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES A. RUSSELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3848) for the relief of James A. Russell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James A. Russell, for transporting the mail on route No. 6531, from New Smyrna to Indian River, Fla., from January 1 to March 31, 1861, the sum of $100.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MACON. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman why this gentleman was not paid at the time he performed the service?

Mr. MILLER. This is one of the old claims for carrying the mails in the South. It was not paid for the reason that it was before the beginning of the war. There is no evidence to show that he ever received his pay from the Government of the United States or from the Confederate States.

Mr. MURDOCK. May I ask the gentleman if this is the first time this bill has been reported?

Mr. MILLER. I think it is the first time this bill has been reported, but there are a great many bills of like character which have been reported and passed.

Mr. MANN. We pass one every time we consider bills on this calendar.

Mr. MILLER. That is true; and I hope the last of them will soon be disposed of.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

B. JACKMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2580) for the relief of B. Jackman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to B. Jackman, agent of the Maine Central Railroad Company, Vanceboro, Me., the sum of $1,678.88, for refund of duties paid on 1,499 cases of condensed milk erroneously entered for consumption and shipped in transit through the United States to Dawson, Yukon Territory.

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,678.88 for the purposes specified in this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MACON. I reserve the right to object, in order to get an explanation.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. This was a case where some goods were shipped from Maine, intended to go through Canadian territory to Dawson, Yukon Territory. The railroad had by mistake carried them through to San Francisco, in the United States, and paid the duties on them. They were taken at San Francisco and shipped to Dawson. There is no controversy about the goods being shipped from one part of Canada to another part. They could have been shipped through the United States in bond, but through an error the railroad company—not the people who shipped the goods—the railroad company assumed that they were going to San Francisco, and they were sent to San Francisco and the duty paid. This is to refund the duty.

Mr. MACON. Did the railroad company misroute the goods?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. MACON. Brought them into the United States when they never should have come here?

Mr. MANN. Sent them to San Francisco when they should not have gone there. It was intended that they should go the other way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the objection is withdrawn.

Mr. MACON. Yes.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CHARLES H. DICKSON.

The next business was the bill (S. 6665) for the relief of Charles H. Dickson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles H. Dickson, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $256.72 cents, to reimburse him for money taken by burglars from the safe in the office of the Fort Lapwai Indian school, in Idaho, on the night of October 11, 1906, said Charles H. Dickson having been on the date specified in charge of said school as Indian school supervisor and responsible for said money under his official bond, to be immediately available.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6, strike out "fifty-six" and insert "forty-six."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

D. J. HOLMES.

The next business was the bill (S. 437) for the relief of D. J. Holmes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to D. J. Holmes, of Portland, Oreg., the sum of $500, in full satisfaction for moneys expended by said Holmes on preemption claim to the northwest quarter of section 10, in township 6 south of range 12 east of the Willamette meridian, in The Dalles land district, State of Oregon, on which he filed declaratory statement No. 4688, June 1, 1885, and on which he settled May 17, 1885, and from which he was ousted by the same being included by a certain survey in the Warm Springs Indian Reservation in said State.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

M. H. PLUNKETT.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8277) placing M. H. Plunkett, assistant engineer, United States Navy, on the retired list with an advanced rank.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have that bill passed without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to have this bill passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHARLES FITZGERALD.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 24303) for the relief of the estate of Charles Fitzgerald.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of Charles Fitzgerald, late an inspector of the Post-Office Department, who was murdered while in the discharge of his duties as an officer of the United States and because of the faithful discharge of those duties, the sum of $1,600, being one year's salary.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

J. DE L. LAFITTE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 5268) for the relief of J. de Lafitte.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be investigated and examined the circumstances of an embezzlement of quartermaster funds on board the United States Army transport Logan, discovered while Jacques de L. Lafitte, captain, quartermaster, U. S. Army, was serving as transport quartermaster, amounting to $2,923.44 cents; and if upon such examination and investigation he shall be satisfied that said Lafitte exercised due diligence and care, under the circumstances existing there at the time, in view of his physical disability, and had no personal knowledge that such embezzlement or embezzlements were occurring, and exercised due diligence in ferreting out and disclosing same, then he is hereby authorized and directed to release and discharge said Lafitte from any further liability for said sum of $2,923.44, and to refund and pay back to said Lafitte whatever sums may have been withheld and deducted from his pay.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN D. BALDWIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 21881) for the relief of John D. Baldwin.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $80 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay John D. Baldwin, of Junction City, Kans., for a horse killed by a fragment of a shell fired from a gun belonging to Siege Battery O, Seventh Artillery, while at target practice on the military reservation at Fort Riley, Kans., on December 6, 1900.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ROYAL L. SWEANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 24373) to reimburse Royal L. Sweany, late deputy collector of internal revenue at Tacoma, Wash.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Royal L. Sweany, late a deputy collector of internal revenue at Tacoma, State of Washington, the sum of $107, as a reimbursement of the aforesaid Royal L. Sweany for that amount of money paid by him to the Government to cover the value of certain documentary revenue stamps forwarded in the mails by said Royal L. Sweany, as deputy collector, on or about June 30, 1902, from Tacoma, Wash., to the office of the collector for the district of Oregon, at Portland, Oreg., and lost in transit.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FRANCES F. CLEVELAND AND MARY LORD HARRISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25019) granting the franking privilege to Frances F. Cleveland.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all mail matter sent by the post by Frances F. Cleveland, widow of the late Grover Cleveland, under her written autograph signature, be conveyed free of postage during her natural life.

With the following committee amendments:

Amend the bill so as to read as follows:

"That all mail matter sent by the post by Frances F. Cleveland, widow of the late Grover Cleveland, under her written autograph signature, and by Mary Lord Harrison, widow of the late Benjamin Harrison, under her written autograph signature, be conveyed free of postage during the natural life of each, respectively.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say that this completes the call of the calendar.

WILLIS A. JOY.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 1091 (H. R. 6903), for the relief of Willis A. Joy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to recur to Calendar No. 1091. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the right to object. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6903) for the relief of Willis A. Joy.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Willis A. Joy $108, to reimburse him for money paid by him at the direction of the Post-Office Department while postmaster at Grand Forks, N. Dak., for redemption of certain post-office keys, and for which redemption no funds were ever provided him nor reimbursement made, and said sum is hereby appropriated for this purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have read the report in this case carefully. It seems to me the statements are about as "fishy" as can be. The claim is ten years old and never was presented to the department, and the department says that it has no papers on file in regard to it. I wish the gentleman who introduced the bill would explain what the Post-Office Department knows about the bill, now ten years old.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to explain the bill. As a matter of fact, the claim was presented to the department six years ago, but a bill has not been introduced before this one. This is a bill for $108 which was sent by Mr. Joy, then postmaster at Grand Forks, to the department at Chicago for the redemption of keys. It is money he paid out of his own pocket. The department has never said that this was not a legitimate claim, but it has said to Mr. Spalding, then a Member of Congress, that they could not return this money without a special bill being introduced. This Mr. Spalding did not do. Four years ago when I was elected to Congress Mr. Joy asked me if anything could be done, and I introduced this bill. The department says that there is no objection to the payment of this amount. It was money actually paid to the Treasury of the United States by Mr. Joy, who was then the postmaster.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman can find where the Post-Office Department has stated that there was no objection to the passage of this bill, or where the claim was ever presented to the department——

Mr. MILLER. There is no question about the claim being presented to the department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Kansas point out anything in the report——

Mr. MILLER. When the bill was sent to the department the department reported that the papers originally filed in the case of Mr. Joy were not available, and they could not report. The gentleman will find, on page 3 of the report——

Mr. MANN. I have read the report.

Mr. MILLER. On page 3 it says:

OFFICE OF FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1908.

Hon. J. M. MILLER,
Chairman Committee on Claims, House of Representatives.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 6th instant, which the Postmaster-General has referred to this office, in regard to the claim of Mr. Willis A. Joy, former postmaster of Grand Forks, N. Dak., for reimbursement for redemption funds sent in by him to the department, there are inclosed copies of the correspondence relating to the matter now on file in this office. The papers which would indicate the exact facts in regard to this matter are no longer available, and it is impracticable for the department to make a definite recommendation in regard to the claim submitted by Mr. Joy. It seems, however, from the correspondence submitted herewith that it is very probable that Mr. Joy, through his unfamiliarity with postal matters, transmitted to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department funds which in reality should have been retained by him for the redemption of post-office keys.

Respectfully,

F. H. HITCHCOCK,
First Assistant Postmaster-General.

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., May 2, 1906.

Hon JAMES M. MILLER,
Chairman Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, inclosing a copy of a bill (H. R. 17311) for the relief of Willis A. Joy, formerly postmaster at Grand Forks, N. Dak., and to inform you that as the papers relating to the matter of the payment by Mr. Joy of the sum of $108 from his private funds, in 1896, in the redemption of keys to the delivery boxes are not now available, I am unable to furnish your committee any information in reference to this claim.

If the facts are as stated in certain correspondence recently submitted to the department by Representative GRONNA, Mr. Joy's claim would seem to be a meritorious one.

Respectfully,

G. B. CORTELYOU,
Postmaster-General.

They said that the papers were not now available, but they furnished us with information; so we did the next best thing——

Mr. MANN. They had no papers.

Mr. MILLER. They were not now available. They did not know where they were.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say they did have the papers, because I presented the papers to the department myself.

Mr. MANN. Here is a report from the Post-Office Department, two letters from the claimant, and in no case is there a pretense that this claim was ever presented to the Post-Office Department or that it has any papers on the subject.

Mr. MILLER. I will state to the gentleman that the claim was presented to the Post-Office Department.

Mr. MANN. By whom?

Mr. MILLER. But they had no funds out of which they could pay a claim of this kind.

Mr. MANN. It is very peculiar that neither the Postmaster-General in two reports, nor the claimant in two letters, makes the statement.

Mr. MILLER. They said to us they could not find the papers, in a verbal statement, and then in their written report that the papers were not available. There is no question about this man paying his money out of his own private funds, and there is no reason why he should not be reimbursed.

Mr. MANN. I have a great deal of question about it myself.

Mr. GRONNA. Here is the sworn affidavit in the report. The claimant is a man of very high standing and good character, and his statement must be accepted as the truth.

Mr. MILLER. Not only the sworn affidavit of the claimant himself, but the evidence discloses the fact that he was a man of high standing and good character and no question was ever raised about the veracity of his statements. We have passed this afternoon the same kind of a bill, and for that reason I think this ought to be passed.

Mr. MANN. The case we passed this afternoon was where key-deposit money was stolen. The law returns postal money or money order stolen, and we only carried it to the extent of key-deposit money, but that is an entirely different case from this. Here is a man who waits ten years, so far as this record is concerned, and then does not make any claim to the Post-Office Department, and there are no facts stated from the Post-Office Department. It seems to me that we have a right to have these cases examined by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. MILLER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the claim was presented by Mr. Joy to the Post-Office Department immediately afterwards and ever since that time.

Mr. MANN. He does not say so.

Mr. MILLER. Ever since that time he has been pressing his claim, not only through the present Member of Congress from that district, but the former Member of Congress from the same district. This man has done everything in his power that he can do. He lost his money.

Mr. MANN. We do not know whether he did or not.

Mr. MILLER. He swears he did.

Mr. MANN. He waits ten years, and a man's recollection ten years afterwards about how he complicates accounts is not worth much anywhere.

Mr. GRONNA. He made a claim for this money immediately upon his retirement as postmaster. There is no question about that.

Mr. MANN. There is a question about it. I question it. Here is a man who writes two letters on the subject, setting out his claim fully, and makes no reference to such a thing. Unless the gentleman states it upon his own information, then I question it very much.

Mr. GRONNA. I do state it on my own information that he presented the claim immediately.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman says to me or to the House that he knows what was done in 1894, 1895, or 1896, personally, by this man, and that he presented the claim, I shall make no objection.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say this, in answer to the gentleman from Illinois, that I had no knowledge of the case at that particular time, because my predecessor was then in office, but there were some things connected with this which I do not care to state on this floor.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman to whom the gentleman refers, Mr. Spalding, was not a Member of the House at that time.

Mr. GRONNA. Not in 1894?

Mr. MANN. Not when this claim accrued, according to the statement—not until long after.

Mr. GRONNA. I will state to the gentleman that I know of my own knowledge that this claim has been presented to the Post-Office Department by Mr. Joy himself, and that I have presented it to the Post-Office Department, and that of course the department can not pay it. There is no provision of law under which the department can pay it.

Mr. MANN. The department could pay it easy enough if the thing happened the way it is stated to have happened. The department has a law to cover such cases exactly. Now, if the gentleman presented his claim, if that is the way it was presented, those papers, I presume, are still on file. I do not imagine they have destroyed papers in the Post-Office Department since the gentleman has come here as a distinguished Member of the House.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say that I have taken the case up with the department personally and asked them if this money could be refunded, and I was given to understand the only way it could be done was by a special act of Congress.

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly, because there was no claim, and under the law he could not be paid without making a claim before this time.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the bill will be laid aside with a favorable recommendation. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEDE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the committee recur to Calendar No. 992 (S. 5330) for the relief of the Mille Lac band of Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the committee recur to the bill, Calendar No. 992. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MACON. I was going to ask for the regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. BEDE. Mr. Chairman, I can explain any objection that may be made to the bill——

Mr. MACON. I think, with justice to other Members who have private bills upon this calendar, I am not objecting to the gentleman's bill——

Mr. BEDE. The calendar has been read over.

Mr. MACON. There was an understanding we were to go back after going through the calendar and take up the bills in their regular order just as if they had not been over.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the order, the question now, as far as the calendar is concerned, is exactly the same as if no special order was made; and it would be to take up matters in order, unless the House voted otherwise.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that I asked the gentleman from Kansas whether the regular order would be after passing all bills to which there was no objection, that then the bills objected to would be called in their regular order, and he replied in the affirmative, and his request for unanimous consent was granted with that understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the situation to be exactly as the Chair stated it.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, while I regret exceedingly to do it, I am compelled, in order that we may be able to get the bills through the House that have been reported favorably on this afternoon, to move to rise. I therefore move that the committee do now rise and report the bills and amendments back to the House with the recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw——

The CHAIRMAN. It matters not whether the gentleman withdraws his point or not, the question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the committee do rise.

Mr. MACON. I was going to ask the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURRIER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills and resolutions and had instructed him to report the same, some with amendments and some without amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills do pass, and that the resolutions be agreed to, and that he was also directed to report that the bill H. R. 16048 be reported with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the previous question be ordered upon all bills and amendments to their final passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered upon all bills and resolutions reported to their final passage, except the bill which is to be laid on the table.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

BILL TABLED.

House bill of the following title, reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union with the recommendation that it lie on the table, was laid on the table:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had, on January 14, 1909, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 22306. An act to authorize the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company and the Lackawanna Railroad Company of New Jersey to construct and maintain a bridge across the Delaware River from a point near the village of Columbia, Knowlton Township, Warren County, N. J., to the village of Slateford, Northampton County, Pa.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 8439. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise lands in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., and grant the same to the Great Northern Railway—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.
S. 8357. An act to extend the time for disposing of lands on the Huntley project within the ceded Crow Indian Reservation, Mont.—to the Committee on the Public Lands.
S. 8005. An act authorizing the establishment of aids to navigation in Alaskan waters and making an appropriation therefor—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.
S. 7396. An act for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. R. 114. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to dispose of certain bronze or brass cannon—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
S. R. 111. Joint resolution authorizing the rebuilding of the dormitory at Osage Boarding School, Oklahoma, recently destroyed by fire—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles:

H. R. 23351. An act for the relief of the owners of the Mexican steamship Tabasqueno;

H. R. 8615. An act to correct the naval record of Edward T. Lincoln; and

H. R. 14343. An act to correct the naval record of Randolph W. Campbell.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bill:

H. R. 23866. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge between Fort Snelling Reservation and St. Paul, Minn.," approved March 17, 1906.

BENJAMIN BENNETT AND GEORGE BENNETT.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 388, which I send to the Clerk's desk, entitled "An act to confirm and legalize prior admissions to citizenship of the United States where the judge or clerk of the court administering the oath to the applicant or his witnesses has failed to sign or seal the record, oath, or the judgment of admission, and to establish a proper record of such citizenship."

And I also ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may report the amendment in the way of an entire substitute instead of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill on the House Calendar, and asks that the amendment be read in lieu of the original bill.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:
"Be it enacted, etc., That Benjamin Bennett and George Bennett, of West Branch, Ogemaw County, Mich., may be naturalized without making the declaration required by section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to establish a bureau of immigration and naturalization and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States,' approved June 29, 1906, and without waiting the two years required by that section."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this bill? I could not understand from the reading of it, and neither could anybody else.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It was presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LOUD] originally, and covers the case of two gentlemen out in his district who have always thought they were citizens. One of them has been mayor of the city in which he lives, and another is an attorney and a county officer. The facts are that their father came here from England very many years ago when they were small children. He only filed a declaration of intention—what is commonly known as the "first papers." He voted all his lifetime, which he had a right to do in Michigan, and never went any further. And these gentlemen always thought they were citizens, and were voting and acting as citizens, until a question came up about some United States lands. Then it was found that their father had not taken out the second papers. This simply waives the two years that they otherwise would have to wait before they became citizens.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does it name these two men specifically?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I got a letter from a man the other day who had voted for twenty years, and thought he had a perfect right to vote. But when he went to vote last fall somebody challenged his vote. It turned out that his father came over here when this boy was only 2 years old, and that his father never took out naturalization papers, although this man supposed that he had, and so he lost his vote. Now, I have not that man's letter. If I had, I would amend by putting his name in.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will say privately, between ourselves, that if the gentleman will send that man's name to me, I will take steps to have it put in in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, what is the provision of this bill?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Simply that it enables these men to be naturalized now instead of waiting the two years. They do not have to file a declaration or a petition. Otherwise they would have to file a declaration of intention and wait two years.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me? Are there not a number of instances of gentlemen similarly situated, and will not Congress be burdened by any number of like bills if this bill goes through?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, which has a good many requests, never reported on another one where the facts are so strong as these. Such cases are extremely rare.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are many cases, I imagine, if the gentleman will permit my statement, of persons who have acted as citizens by voting, holding offices of trust and responsibility, and yet are not technically citizens, and who would be virtually in the same class as those designated in this bill.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Unquestionably there are men——

Mr. STAFFORD. If such is the fact, will not there be many bills presented asking for the same relief?

Mr. BENNET of New York. No; I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. I think I can give an explanation which will be explanatory. The first bill on this subject was the one I introduced——

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. MANN (continuing). Covering the criminal court of Chicago, where naturalizations exceeding 15,000 or so had been issued for many years; and when that bill came up there was a difference of opinion between the House and the Senate as to whether there should be general legislation enacted. The bill finally went through in behalf of the people who had been naturalized illegally by the criminal court. Now, there is still some difference of opinion between the House and the Senate on the subject, and I apprehend before they get through discussing this measure between the two bodies that they will try to get something that will be satisfactory all around.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is the intention.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. What are the ages of these gentlemen?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Oh, they are certainly over 40 years.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. One of them an attorney?

Mr. BENNET of New York. One of them an attorney, and another was the mayor of the city in which he lived.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Now, do I understand the gentleman to say that they have just recently discovered that they were not entitled to citizenship?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Within a year.

Mr. EDWARDS of Georgia. Thank you.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask if this is a unanimous report from any committee or not?

Mr. BENNET of New York. It is.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When was the report made?

Mr. MANN. May 19; it is on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. May 12, 1908.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, you say you will help me to get my man in? [Laughter.]

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. Without objection the amendment will be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

MOUNT OLIVET CEMETERY, SALT LAKE, UTAH.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 23863.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23863) for the exchange of certain lands situated in the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, State of Utah, for lands adjacent thereto, between the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, and the Government of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War, for and on behalf of the United States, is hereby authorized and directed to grant and convey by deed to the Mount Olivet Cemetery Association, of Salt Lake City, Utah, the following-described tract of land: Commencing at the southwest corner of the Fort Douglas Military Reservation and running thence east along and upon the south line of said Fort Douglas Military Reservation 80 rods; thence north parallel with the west boundary line of the said military reservation to the southeast corner of the Mount Olivet Cemetery grant; thence west along the south boundary line of the said Mount Olivet Cemetery grant 80 rods to the intersection of said line with the west line of said military reservation; thence south along and upon said west line of said military reservation to the place of beginning, containing an area of 50 acres, more or less. Said land to be by the said Mount Olivet Cemetery Association permanently used as a cemetery for the burial of the dead: Provided, That when it shall cease to be used for such purpose it shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 2. That the deed provided for in the foregoing section of this act shall not be delivered to the said Mount Olivet Cemetery Association until said association shall have conveyed, or caused to be conveyed, to the United States in fee simple, free and clear of all incumbrances, subject to the approval of the Attorney-General of the United States, the following-described land, to-wit: The fractional southwest quarter of section 2, township 1 south, range 1 east, Salt Lake meridian, containing 150.92 acres, situate in Salt Lake County, State of Utah.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—if I understand this matter correctly, this bill is not recommended by any committee of the House.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. It is recommended unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs, and has the indorsement of the Secretary of War also.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the gentleman to move to discharge the committee from its consideration.

Mr. MANN. The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is that the cemetery bill?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand you to move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union?

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, while the bill probably was reported unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs, I think, in justice to myself, as I had consideration of the bill delayed for a week, I ought to say that when the bill first came up I made inquiry whether or not the cemetery was a public cemetery or a private corporation, indicating that in the event it was a private corporation I should object. I then went away and was absent on public business, and while I was gone the bill was reported. I am told that the committee was satisfied, although the cemetery association was a private corporation, that it was a proper bill.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah. I will explain that Mount Olivet Cemetery Association is composed of the several churches in Salt Lake City, each having a representation in the association. It is purely a benevolent and charitable association. Some thirty-five years ago the Secretary of War was authorized to set apart 20 acres of this military reservation for a burial ground, which has been under the management and control of this association. Now, all the ground originally set apart has been fully occupied, and the association desires to acquire additional ground adjoining the present cemetery, and in exchange for this ground it is proposed to give to the military reservation 160 acres adjoining the reservation on the west, and which is much more useful to the Government for military purposes, for the land acquired from the Government in exchange, and which they bind themselves to use for no other purpose than cemetery purposes.

I will state further that there is no private gain connected with the management of this cemetery. The moneys arising from the sale of burial lots is devoted to the improvement and beautifying of the cemetery grounds. The bill is considered by the Secretary of War to be in the interest of the Government, and it has been unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SLAYDEN. As before stated, I was absent when the bill was reported.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

VETO MESSAGE—DAM ACROSS JAMES RIVER, STONE COUNTY, MO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without my approval House bill 17707 to authorize William H. Standish to construct a dam across James River, in Stone County, Mo., and divert a portion of its waters through a tunnel into the said river again to create electric power. My reasons for not signing the bill are:

The bill gives to the grantee a valuable privilege, which by its very nature is monopolistic, and does not contain the conditions essential to protect the public interest.

In pursuance of a policy declared in my message of February 26, 1908 (S. Doc. No. 325), transmitting the report of the Inland Waterways Commission to Congress, I wrote on March 13, 1908, the following letter to the Senate Committee on Commerce:

Numerous bills granting water rights in conformity with the general act of June 21, 1906, have been introduced during the present session of Congress, and some of these have already passed. While the general act authorizes the limitation and restriction of water rights in the public interest and would seem to warrant making a reasonable charge for the benefits conferred, those bills which have come to my attention do not seem to guard the public interests adequately in these respects. The effect of granting privileges such as are conferred by these bills, as I said in a recent message, "taken together with rights already acquired under state laws, would be to give away properties of enormous value. Through lack of foresight we have formed the habit of granting without compensation extremely valuable rights, amounting to monopolies, on navigable streams and on the public domain. The repurchase at great expense of water rights thus carelessly given away without return has already begun in the East, and before long will be necessary in the West also. No rights involving water power should be granted to any corporation in perpetuity, but only for a length of time sufficient to allow them to conduct their business profitably. A reasonable charge should, of course, be made for valuable rights and privileges which they obtain from the National Government. The values for which this charge is made will ultimately, through the natural growth and orderly development of our population and industries, reach enormous amounts. A fair share of the increase should be safeguarded for the benefit of the people, from whose labor it springs. The proceeds thus secured, after the cost of administration and improvement has been met, should naturally be devoted to the development of our inland waterways." Accordingly I have decided to sign no bills hereafter which do not provide specifically for the right to fix and make a charge and for a definite limitation in time of the rights conferred.

In my veto message of April 13, 1908, returning House bill 15444, to extend the time for the construction of a dam across Rainy River, I said:

We are now at the beginning of great development in water power. Its use through electrical transmission is entering more and more largely into every element of the daily life of the people. Already the evils of monopoly are becoming manifest; already the experience of the past shows the necessity of caution in making unrestricted grants of this great power.

The present policy pursued in making these grants is unwise in giving away the property of the people in the flowing waters to individuals or organizations practically unknown, and granting in perpetuity these valuable privileges in advance of the formulation of definite plans as to their use. In some cases the grantees apparently have little or no financial or other ability to utilize the gift, and have sought it merely because it could be had for the asking.

The Rainy River Company, by an agreement in writing, approved by the War Department, subsequently promised to submit to and abide by such conditions as may be imposed by the Secretary of War, including a time limit and a reasonable charge. Only because of its compliance in this way with these conditions did the bill extending the time limit for that project finally become a law.

An amendment to the present bill expressly authorizing the Government to fix a limitation of time and impose a charge was proposed by the War Department. The letter, veto message, and amendment above referred to were considered by the Senate Committee on Commerce, as appears by the committee's report on the present bill, and the proposed amendment was characterized by the committee as a "new departure from the policy heretofore pursued in respect to legislation authorizing the construction of such dams." Their report set forth an elaborate legal argument intended to show that the Federal Government has no power to impose any charge whatever for such a privilege.

The fact that the proposed policy is new is in itself no sufficient argument against its adoption. As we are met with new conditions of industry seriously affecting the public welfare, we should not hesitate to adopt measures for the protection of the public merely because those measures are new. When the public welfare is involved, Congress should resolve any reasonable doubt as to its legislative power in favor of the people and against the seekers for a special privilege.

My reason for believing that the Federal Government, in granting a license to dam a navigable river, has the power to impose any condition it finds necessary to protect the public, including a charge and a limitation of the time, is that its consent is legally essential to an enterprise of this character. It follows that Congress can impose conditions upon its consent. This principle was clearly stated in the House of Representatives on March 28, 1908, by Mr. WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, when he said:

* * * There can be no doubt in the mind of any man seeking merely the public good and public right, independently of any desire for local legislation, of this general proposition, that whenever any sovereignty, state or federal, is required to issue a charter or a license or a consent, in order to confer powers upon individuals or corporations, it is the duty of that sovereignty in the interests of the people so to condition the grant of that power as that it shall redound to the interest of all the people, and that utilities of vast value should not be gratuitously granted to individuals or corporations and perpetually alienated from the people or the state or the government.

* * * It is admitted that this power to erect dams in navigable streams can not be exercised by anybody except by an act of Congress. Now, then, if it require an act of Congress to permit any man to put a dam in a navigable stream, then two things follow: Congress should so exercise the power in making that grant as, first, to prevent any harm to the navigability of the stream itself, and, secondly, so as to prevent any individual or any private corporation from securing through the act of Congress any uncompensated advantage of private profit.

The authority of Congress in this matter was asserted by Secretary Taft on April 17, 1908, in his report on Senator Newlands's Inland Waterways Commission bill (S. 500), where he said:

> In the execution of any project and as incidental to and inseparably connected with the improvement of navigation, the power of Congress extends to the regulation of the use and development of the waters for purposes subsidiary to navigation.

And by the Solicitor-General in a memorandum prepared after a careful investigation of the subject.

Believing that the National Government has this power, I am convinced that its power ought to be exercised. The people of the country are threatened by a monopoly far more powerful, because in far closer touch with their domestic and industrial life, than anything known to our experience. A single generation will see the exhaustion of our natural resources of oil and gas and such a rise in the price of coal as will make the price of electrically transmitted water power a controlling factor in transportation, in manufacturing, and in household lighting and heating. Our water power alone, if fully developed and wisely used, is probably sufficient for our present transportation, industrial, municipal, and domestic needs. Most of it is undeveloped and is still in national or state control.

To give away, without conditions, this, one of the greatest of our resources, would be an act of folly. If we are guilty of it, our children will be forced to pay an annual return upon a capitalization based upon the highest prices which "the traffic will bear." They will find themselves face to face with powerful interests intrenched behind the doctrine of "vested rights" and strengthened by every defense which money can buy and the ingenuity of able corporation lawyers can devise. Long before that time they may and very probably will have become a consolidated interest, controlled from the great financial centers, dictating the terms upon which the citizen can conduct his business or earn his livelihood, and not amenable to the wholesome check of local opinion.

The total water power now in use by power plants in the United States is estimated by the Bureau of the Census and the Geological Survey as 5,300,000 horsepower. Information collected by the Bureau of Corporations shows that thirteen large concerns, of which the General Electric Company and the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company are most important, now hold water-power installations and advantageous power sites aggregating about 1,046,000 horsepower, where the control by these concerns is practically admitted. This is a quantity equal to over 19 per cent of the total now in use. Further evidence of a very strong nature as to additional intercorporate relations, furnished by the Bureau, leads me to the conclusion that this total should be increased to 24 per cent; and still other evidence, though less conclusive, nevertheless affords reasonable ground for enlarging this estimate by 9 per cent additional. In other words, it is probable that these thirteen concerns directly or indirectly control developed water power and advantageous power sites equal to more than 33 per cent of the total water power now in use. This astonishing consolidation has taken place practically within the last five years. The movement is still in its infancy, and unless it is controlled the history of the oil industry will be repeated in the hydro-electric power industry, with results far more oppressive and disastrous for the people. It is true that the great bulk of our potential water power is as yet undeveloped, but the sites which are now controlled by combinations are those which offer the greatest advantages and therefore hold a strategic position. This is certain to be strengthened by the increasing demand for power and the extension of long-distance electrical transmission.

It is, in my opinion, relatively unimportant for us to know whether or not the promoters of this particular project are affiliated with any of these great corporations. If we make an unconditional grant to this grantee, our control over it ceases. He, or any purchaser from him, will be free to sell his rights to any one of them at pleasure. The time to attach conditions and prevent monopoly is when a grant is made.

The great corporations are acting with foresight, singleness of purpose, and vigor to control the water powers of the country. They pay no attention to state boundaries and are not interested in the constitutional law affecting navigable streams except as it affords what has been aptly called a "twilight zone," where they may find a convenient refuge from any regulation whatever by the public, whether through the national or the state governments. It is significant that they are opposing the control of water power on the Desplaines River by the State of Illinois with equal vigor and with like arguments to those with which they oppose the National Government pursuing the policy I advocate. Their attitude is the same with reference to their projects upon the mountain streams of the West, where the jurisdiction of the Federal Government as the owner of the public lands and national forests is not open to question. They are demanding legislation for unconditional grants in perpetuity of land for reservoirs, conduits, power houses, and transmission lines to replace the existing statute which authorizes the administrative officers of the Government to impose conditions to protect the public when any permit is issued. Several bills for that purpose are now pending in both Houses, among them the bill, S. 6626, to subject lands owned or held by the United States to condemnation in the state courts, and the bills, H. R. 11356 and S. 2661, respectively, to grant locations and rights of way for electric and other power purposes through the public lands and reservations of the United States. These bills were either drafted by representatives of the power companies, or are similar in effect to those thus drafted. On the other hand, the administration proposes that authority be given to issue power permits for a term not to exceed fifty years, irrevocable except for breach of condition. This provision to prevent revocation would remove the only valid ground of objection to the act of 1901, which expressly makes all permits revocable at discretion. The following amendment to authorize this in national forests was inserted in last year's agricultural appropriation bill:

> And hereafter permits for power plants within national forests may be made irrevocable, except for breach of condition, for such term, not exceeding fifty years, as the Secretary of Agriculture may by regulation prescribe, and land covered by such permits issued in pursuance of an application filed before entry, location, or application, subsequently approved under the act of June 11, 1906, shall in perpetuity remain subject to such permit and renewals thereof.

The representatives of the power companies present in Washington during the last session agreed upon the bill above mentioned as the most favorable to their interests. At their request frequent conferences were held between them and the representatives of the administration for the purpose of reaching an agreement if possible. The companies refused to accept anything less than a grant in perpetuity and insisted that the slight charge now imposed by the Forest Service was oppressive. But they made no response to the specific proposal that the reasonableness of the charge be determined through an investigation of their business by the Bureau of Corporations.

The amendment of the agricultural bill providing for irrevocable permits being new legislation was stricken out under the House rules upon a point of order made by friends of the House bill—that is, by friends of the power companies. Yet, in the face of this record, the power companies complain that they are forced to accept revocable permits by the policy of the administration.

The new legislation sought in their own interest by some companies in the West, and the opposition of other companies in the East to proposed legislation in the public interest, have a common source and a common purpose. Their source is the rapidly growing water-power combination. Their purpose is a centralized monopoly of hydro-electric power development free of all public control. It is obvious that a monopoly of power in any community calls for strict public supervision and regulation.

The suggestion of the Senate Committee on Commerce in their report on the present bill that many of the streams for the damming of which a federal license is sought are, in fact, unnavigable is sufficiently answered in this case by the action of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce upon this very measure. As stated in the House on March 18, 1908, by Mr. RUSSELL of Missouri, a bill to declare this river unnavigable was rejected by that committee.

I repeat the words with which I concluded my message vetoing the Rainy River bill:

> In place of the present haphazard policy of permanently alienating valuable public property we should substitute a definite policy along the following lines:
> First. There should be a limited or carefully guarded grant in the nature of an option or opportunity afforded within reasonable time for development of plans and for execution of the project.
> Second. Such a grant or concession should be accompanied in the act making the grant by a provision expressly making it the duty of a designated official to annul the grant if the work is not begun or plans are not carried out in accordance with the authority granted.
> Third. It should also be the duty of some designated official to see to it that in approving the plans the maximum development of the navigation and power is assured, or at least that in making the plans these may not be so developed as ultimately to interfere with the better utilization of the water or complete development of the power.
> Fourth. There should be a license fee or charge which, though small or nominal at the outset, can in the future be adjusted so as to secure a control in the interest of the public.
> Fifth. Provision should be made for the termination of the grant or privilege at a definite time, leaving to future generations the power or authority to renew or extend the concession in accordance with the conditions which may prevail at that time.

Further reflection suggests a sixth condition, viz:

The license should be forfeited upon proof that the licensee has joined in any conspiracy or unlawful combination in restraint of trade, as is provided for grants of coal lands in Alaska by the act of May 28, 1908.

I will sign no bill granting a privilege of this character which does not contain the substance of these conditions. I consider myself bound, as far as exercise of my executive power will allow, to do for the people, in prevention of monopoly of their resources, what I believe they would do for themselves if they were in a position to act. Accordingly I shall insist upon the conditions mentioned above not only in acts which I sign, but also in passing upon plans for use of water power presented to the executive departments for action. The imposition of conditions has received the sanction of Congress in the general act of 1906, regulating the construction of dams in navigable waters, which authorizes the imposing of "such conditions and stipulations as the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War may deem necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States."

I inclose a letter from the Commissioner of Corporations, setting forth the results of his investigations and the evidence of the far-reaching plans and operations of the General Electric Company, the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, and other large concerns, for consolidation of the water powers of the country under their control. I also inclose the memorandum of the Solicitor-General above referred to.

I esteem it my duty to use every endeavor to prevent this growing monopoly, the most threatening which has ever appeared, from being fastened upon the people of this nation.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 15, 1909.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the veto message and accompanying document be printed and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS CURRENT RIVER, MISSOURI.

The Speaker laid before the House the bill (H. R. 23713) authorizing the construction of a bridge across Current River, in Missouri, with a Senate amendment thereto.

Mr. SMITH of Missouri. I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand that amendment strikes out the words "iron drawbridge" in the House bill, leaving it simply a bridge, with no restriction as to the kind.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that it is customary to leave the kind of bridge, under the general bridge law, in the control of the War Department. This leaves it to the War Department to determine the kind of bridge, without requiring what kind it shall be.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does the gentleman think that is as wise a procedure as it would be for the bill itself to indicate the character of bridge? Is it not imposing a great burden upon a man in the War Department to tell what kind of a bridge shall be constructed over a stream about which he knows nothing except what is reported to him by parties largely interested always, 1,500 miles or more away from Washington?

Mr. MANN. The War Department knows far better the conditions and necessities as to a particular stream, after investigation through the Engineer Corps, than we can possibly know here. For that reason we leave it to the War Department, because otherwise we would constantly indicate a kind of bridge which would not be a sufficient protection to navigation, if we attempted to indicate it. The War Department, I think, guards those matters very carefully.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If anyone thinks otherwise, let him take a bridge bill down there providing for construction across a navigable stream.

The motion of Mr. SMITH of Missouri was agreed to.

Accordingly the House concurred in the Senate amendment.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. CALDERHEAD, for twenty days, on account of important business.

To Mr. PATTERSON, for the remainder of this week, on account of sickness in his family.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported a bill (H. R. 26305) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second times and, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. No. 1861), ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FINLEY. I desire to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina reserves all points of order.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for rent, etc., of buildings at Petersburg, Va. (H. Doc. No. 1323)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing and binding for the commission (H. Doc. No. 1324)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting the annual report of the Director of the Census regarding the publication of the names of heads of families at the First Census (H. Doc. No. 1325)—to the Committee on the Census and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for defraying the expenses of the dedication of certain monuments and markers on the field of Gettysburg (H. Doc. No. 1326)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture submitting a request that the apportionment of the appropriation for general expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry, for 1909 be waived (H. Doc. No. 1169, pt. 2)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, report of employment of civil engineers in river and harbor work (H. Doc. No. 1327)—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of State submitting a recommendation for transfer and change of grade of the consulate at Messina, Italy (H. Doc. No. 1328)—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the director of the mint at Carson, Nev., submitting an estimate of appropriation for wages and expenses at the mint (H. Doc. No. 1329)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting report of Special Agent W. A. Graham Clark on manufacture of woolen, worsted, and shoddy in England and jute in Scotland (H. Doc. No. 1330)—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. RODENBERG, from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to which was referred the concurrent resolution of the House (H. C. Res. 47) accepting the invitation extended to the Congress of the United States by the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition to attend the opening ceremony of said exposition at Seattle, Wash., June 1, 1909, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1857), which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HINSHAW, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 25678) to require life-preservers on motor vessels, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1858), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. WEBB, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred House bill 12432, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 26299) authorizing certain proof in mitigation of damages in actions for libel, accompanied by a report (No. 1859), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STERLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 25405) to change and fix the time for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1860), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25012) granting a pension to John Johnson—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 25536) granting a pension to Charles Wilson—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEDE: A bill (H. R. 26280) relating to the construction and reconstruction of bridges across the St. Louis River between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. PORTER: A bill (H. R. 26281) to provide for the erection of a public building at Batavia, N. Y.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WASHBURN: A bill (H. R. 26282) to provide for the administration of the copyright office—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BURGESS: A bill (H. R. 26283) to provide for the selection of a site in Texas for a dry dock and navy-yard—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 26284) to provide for the extension of S street NW. from Second street to Third street, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 26285) requiring reports of the Hospital for Foundlings to be made to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26286) to amend sections 4 and 16 of an act entitled "An act to incorporate the Columbia Railway Company of the District of Columbia," approved May 24, 1870—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26287) to transfer from the Secretary of the Interior to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia certain duties in respect to the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26288) empowering the juvenile court of the District of Columbia to issue execution on forfeited recognizances—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26289) to prevent prize fighting on vessels using the wharfage facilities of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 26290) to amend an act entitled "An act regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1893—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, January 16, 1909.

The Senate met at 1.30 o'clock p. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Edward E. Hale, offered the following prayer:

The everlasting God, the Lord, Creator of the ends of the earth, fainteth not neither is weary; there is no searching of His understanding. He giveth power to the faint, and to him that hath no might He giveth strength.

* * * * * * *

Even the youth shall faint and be weary, and the old men shall utterly fail. But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. They shall mount on wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint.

Let us pray.

Father of life, we thank Thee that in the memories of death and of sickness we learn the lesson of life; that we live and move and have our being in our God. And here to-day, as we meet to go back upon the history of the past and to know how Thy children have served Thee in the days that have gone by, we ask Thee for this whole Nation to quicken the memory of the history of these centuries; how this Nation has relied upon her children and found them in their places; how men, and women, and boys, and girls have served their country, have lived to Thy glory, and have died without fear. Not in vain for us that Thou art renewing the knowledge of Thy Gospel every day and every year of our lives.

Show us, Father, how we can live in the Spirit, how we can walk in the Spirit, if we enter into the service of God, which is the service of mankind. We ask it in Christ Jesus.

Our Father Who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SCOTT, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR WHYTE.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland submits resolutions, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That it is with deep regret and profound sorrow that the Senate has heard the announcement of the death of Hon. WILLIAM PINKNEY WHYTE, late a Senator from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

The resolutions were considered by unanimous consent and unanimously agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, the stoutest courage and the most gifted tongue might well be overwhelmed on this occasion by the impossibility of doing justice to the character and memory of WILLIAM PINKNEY WHYTE, who was lately a member of this body, taking an active part in its deliberations, buoyantly supporting, as he did, the weight of great cares and many years, bearing the respect and veneration of all, the tender love of many friends, shortly before his death decorated by a grateful constituency with the badge of their confidence engraved by their votes so deep upon the tablets of history as to far outlive his life, crowned with honors such as few can boast, fearing none but God.

But in the judgment of those, who, like myself, enjoyed the privilege of knowing WILLIAM PINKNEY WHYTE, the best tribute to his memory is an unemblished narrative, which faithfully describes his rare qualities of character and intellect, simply portraying him as he was, for his own works speak more eloquently for him than any words of ours can do.

To tell in detail the history of Senator WHYTE's professional career is to write the history of a large part of the more important litigation in Maryland for over sixty years. He was a lawyer by heredity, nature, and training. He was the grandson of the great lawyer and statesman, William Pinkney, and worthily sustained his grandfather's reputation, as the Maryland reports, the reports of the United States Supreme Court, and the political history of Maryland and of the Nation for the last sixty years abundantly show.

Senator WHYTE was born in Baltimore, August 9, 1824. He was of distinguished ancestry on both sides; and while his parents during his early life were by no means rich, they were nevertheless able to give him good educational advantages, including a course at the Harvard Law School. This, with a preceding period spent in study under the tutelage of Brown & Brune, at that time perhaps the leading lawyers of Baltimore, and a subsequent period spent in the office of Judge John Glenn, amply fitted him to hold the commanding position among men of his profession, which was easily his for two generations.

While his youth was free alike from the enervating effect of wealth and from the struggle with adverse conditions, such as often make strong men stronger and crush the weak, his was a rugged, ambitious, and assertive nature, which would easily have survived either extreme, and needed no tempering to make it pure and strong.

The worthy and the good in his cultured and intellectual ancestors were perpetuated in him, so that to a remarkably strong and vigorous physique was added a virile, active mind, mature in its development and sure in its conclusions.

After having worked two years in the office of Peabody, Riggs & Co. as a clerk, and having studied law, we find him in 1847, at the age of 23, for more than a year a member of the bar and also a member of the Maryland legislature, as well as happily married to his first wife, who was the daughter of Levi Hollingsworth, a prominent merchant of Baltimore.

Thus almost simultaneously he began his professional and political career, both crowned with success and honors never before equaled by any son of his native State, and also his domestic life, which was blessed with happiness unshaken and unbroken until he was bowed by the weight of a great domestic sorrow during the year 1880, in the death of Mrs. Whyte.

No other Marylander ever lived a life so filled to the brim with public honors as was his, or perhaps gained a higher place in the esteem of his fellow-citizens.

His unique public service began, as I have said, in 1847–48, as a delegate from Baltimore to the Maryland legislature.

Six years later he was elected to the office of comptroller of the state treasury, where, a youth almost that he was, he made a distinct impression, lasting to this day, because of the marked ability shown by him in reorganizing and simplifying the bookkeeping and financial system of the State.

In 1851 he was nominated by the Democrats for Congress, but was defeated by the Whig candidate, T. Yates Walsh, by a small plurality.

In 1857 he was again nominated for Congress, having refused to accept a renomination for state comptroller, and this time was defeated by the Know-nothing candidate. Senator WHYTE contested the election, and after a wearisome delay and a bitter fight, the House of Representatives, by a vote of 106 to 97, rejected the report of the Elections Committee declaring the seat held by his opponent to be vacant.

In 1868 he was a delegate to the national convention which nominated Horatio Seymour and Francis P. Blair for President and Vice-President of the United States.

In 1871 he was elected governor of Maryland for a term of four years, and was made mayor of Baltimore without organized opposition in 1881.

Without solicitation on his part he was nominated and later elected by the Democrats as attorney-general of Maryland in 1887, and thereafter was again called upon to serve his city as chairman of the important commission appointed to revise and redraft the charter of Baltimore.

While it would thus seem he had spent his full share of time and energy in the public service, he was not permitted to rest or to devote himself to his practice so that he might accumulate some financial resources for his later years, for in 1900 he was again called upon to serve the public, and this time as city solicitor of Baltimore.

He was at three different periods a Member of this body. In 1868 he was appointed by Governor Swann to fill out the unexpired term of Reverdy Johnson, who had resigned his seat to accept the appointment from President Johnson as minister to the Court of St. James.

In 1875, having been elected by the Maryland general assembly, he again took his seat in this Chamber; and thirty-one years later—in 1906—he reentered these doors, by appointment of the governor of Maryland for the interval until the legislature met, as the successor of the late Senator Arthur Pue Gorman, to end his days a Member of this body.

At the primary election next ensuing his appointment as Senator, for the selection by the Democratic party of its candidates for United States Senators, there being two positions to fill from Maryland, factional discord, the selfish aspirations of others, and even diversity of opinion in party councils disappeared, like frost in the sunshine, before the heat of the popular approval of his candidacy by the people throughout Maryland.

As a result, he was nominated for the term ending the 4th of next March by direct vote of his party at the first primary election ever held in Maryland for such a purpose, not only without opposition, but with a spirit of enthusiasm which was a fitting tribute to the service and character of any man, however exalted, and which must have brought fresh warmth to his aged heart, so soon to feel the chill of death, and fresh pride to his great mind, so soon to realize the glories of his Lord.

Senator WHYTE first entered this Chamber while the minds of its Members were still inflamed by the recent impeachment proceedings of President Johnson and when our nation was sore and bleeding after the strife of four years' civil war. At that time he stood with Thomas A. Hendricks and the Democratic minority in support of the President, who had incurred the bitter animosity of Sumner, Conkling, Edmunds, Morton, and the giant leaders of the majority of that day.

But even during his first short service in the Senate he did not shrink from any encounter when he heard the call of duty, no matter how powerful his antagonists or how heavy the odds against him.

A single incident, perhaps long since lost to sight and public memory in the high tide of stirring events of a trying period, will serve to prove the worth of his moral courage and effective argument.

He entered here to find the conflict between Andrew Johnson and the radical Republican majority of this body at its fiercest extreme. Any expression of sympathy for the President was sufficient to blast its author's influence and becloud his subsequent service with angry suspicion and open resentment. The nation was scarcely more than two hostile camps, one overwhelmed, torn, and disarmed, it is true, and the other dominant, compact, victorious. Magnanimity, generosity, confidence, even justice, were well nigh obsolete national virtues, for men's passions ran high, and for a time ran riot with their finer feelings and wiser statesmanship. In the Senate the majority, powerful in numbers, in leadership, and in intellectual capacity, completely controlled the situation, and the handful of Senators composing the minority, able men that they were, could protest, and only protest, and submit.

It was at this stage that President Johnson in December, 1868, submitted his message to the Senate; and before the opening sentences had been read Senator Conness, of California, who within the last week has died, moved to dispense with the further reading of the message, at the same time declaring it in all respects to be an offensive document, and that time could be better employed than in hearing it read.

Scarcely had Senator Conness taken his seat when Senator Whyte arose to defend the President in discharging a public duty in obedience to the Constitution in submitting what he, in the performance of that duty, deemed a proper communication to a coordinate branch of the Government, and that the President was entitled to the Senate's attention and respect.

I trust—

He said—

that for the sake of maintaining that respectful attention which the country demands on the part of the legislative branch of this Government the message of the President may be read in the hearing of the Senate. He is called upon to discharge a great public duty, and in pursuance of the demands made upon him by the Constitution of the United States he seeks to give information to the Senate and House of Representatives of the state of the country. He may use language strong in its character, as Senators often in the discussion of subjects before the Senate may do. He may use language that may be irritating. But, nevertheless, he occupies the high and exalted position of President of the United States. He is communicating in the discharge of his duty that which he conceives ought to be communicated to this, a coordinate branch of the Government, and I trust that at this, the beginning of a new session, or a continued session of Congress, we may have a cordiality in sentiment, or at least a respectful attention to the views and sentiments of those who may differ with regard to the manner in which the Government shall be conducted. I trust, sir, that the motion made by the Senator from California may not prevail.

And the motion did not prevail, for in spite of their early opposition some of the master minds of the majority, notably, Senator Edmunds and Senator Sumner, yielded to the force of Senator WHYTE's position. Though I know of no contemporaneous account of the incident, we may be sure that young though he was, both in years and in point of service as a Member of the Senate, that he defended his position with the same intellectual force, the same hardy, confident courage, the same all-compelling personal attraction which marked all his public utterances.

During his second service as a Member of this body, beginning in 1875, he quite fulfilled the promise of his youth and the hopes of his friends for a useful and distinguished career, as I have no doubt the senior Senator from Colorado, the only Member of this body who served with Senator WHYTE at that period, easily recalls.

His eloquence, his energy, his personal magnetism and transparent honesty carried him far toward leadership on this floor.

His knowledge of the country's needs, his broad, dispassionate view of public questions, his wise conservatism, and his rare legal attainments did much for the Nation, and established his claim to rank among the great men of our times.

Senator WHYTE's career as a lawyer may best be appreciated and best expressed by my colleague. His utterances as a Member of the Senate, his discussion of the currency question, his fight against the Electoral Commission, his service as a member of the committee of Congress to prepare the act establishing substantially the present form of government of the District of Columbia, his fight against ship subsidies, and many others, as well as his speech delivered here last February, forty years after he first addressed the Senate, are all matters of permanent official record, accessible alike to all. There is no need to speak of them.

But for the benefit of those present whose acquaintance with Senator WHYTE was limited to his last short service here, and for those who will come after us, I wish I could frame some worthy description of those personal, human characteristics of his—qualities which require the genius of a Lord Macaulay to portray, so vivid and so rare were they as developed in him by nature, by discipline, and by his faith in religion. However, I must perforce leave them unperpetuated by any lasting or worthy memorial, to finally fade and fail with the decaying memories of those who knew him.

Then, too, I owe him so much for his unvarying personal and political friendship that should I speak of him as I feel he deserves I fear perhaps some may think that my true and sincere esteem for him and for his memory may seem false in this, that any spoken praise of him by me finds inspiration in my own flattered vanity rather than in his worth.

No one who knows the people of Maryland, however, can doubt that my feeling for him was shared by a large majority of the people of his State, and the reason for his well-nigh universal popularity and respect in his own State is not hard to find.

It was impossible for anyone to resist the charm of his old-fashioned manners, recognizing in their exquisite taste and beaming kindliness no distinction of social caste or of age. Caring little for money himself, he loved no man the less who was without it. Even his quaint law offices on the first floor of a very old brick house, once the home of the late Chief Justice Taney, and which he had occupied continuously for over half a century, seemed to link him to a fast-disappearing type of the picturesque past. There, with fine scorn for modern office furniture and conveniences, he laboriously wrote his letters, prepared his legal papers, and his many public speeches with his own pen.

Work had no terror for him, and at the time of his death he had many cases pending; and even on the day of his death he did not rest, but inquired for his mail and for news from the Senate, so that it may be said that he literally almost died at his work.

Like all strong men, he made some bitter enemies; and like all men, who are neither more nor less than human, he cherished a few implacable antagonisms.

Those who have seen something of the malicious and loose statements made in the heat of political campaigns can well appreciate the force of the testimonial to his lofty character and almost perfect domestic life inadvertently furnished by one of his most bitter and ingenious political enemies, one who boasted consummate skill in the use of invective.

This gentleman was urged by his associates to make a public attack on Senator WHYTE, and he in desperation of success said:

> Attack him! What can I say about him? He is a model citizen, a model father, a model son, and a model husband, and he hasn't a bad habit in the world.

It was as a political speaker that Senator WHYTE was best known and best appreciated by his own people, and where, so it seemed to me, he was most in his element. He never failed to attract an audience limited in size only by the capacity of the hall.

As a rule he spoke without notes, and when warmed up to his subject none could surpass him in dramatic effect. His tall, erect frame was all animation then, and seemed possessed with an energy which apparently defied fatigue. His voice was strong and full as he would hurl forth a veritable torrent of vigorous argument, interspersed with occasional touches of broad humor which, as handled by him, in no way seemed to detract from the dignity and earnestness of his address.

His logic and power must have carried consternation to the hearts of his opponents as he usually carried conviction to the minds of his hearers, for surely I have never seen a combination of great physical strength and mental capacity more symmetrical in development or more harmoniously proportioned.

And all his powers seemed to grow and gather force as he spoke, so that he simply dominated his audiences, and none could hear him out and doubt his power or his sincerity or the fact that in that great heart of his there was no hiding place for fear.

Until within a few days of his death, Senator WHYTE did not not seem to feel at all the weight of his 83 years. Then he would speak lightly of that which evidently bore heavily upon his mind, as he marked his increasing loss of weight. Then he would jocosely apologize for taking a little extra care of himself, as he explained, because "he was getting to be an old man."

But still his indomitable spirit sustained unimpaired the effect of his slowly progressive physical weakness and drove him on to a point beyond his strength to bear, until he might have truly said of himself, in reviewing his long life with its ceaseless activity in the light of his ambition to triumph over his physical ills:

> Much have I seen and known; cities of men
> And manners, climates, councils, governments;
> Myself not least, but honour'd of them all.
> * * * * *
> Tho' much is taken, much abides; and tho'
> We are not now that strength which in old days
> Moved earth and heaven; that which we are, we are;
> One equal temper of heroic hearts,
> Made weak by time and fate, but strong in will
> To strive, to seek, to find, and not to yield.

He showed no signs of actual illness until Friday, the 13th day of last March, when he left this Chamber for his home in Baltimore, a stricken man. His trouble was diagnosed as erysipelas. The disease did not assume an especially virulent form until late the following Tuesday afternoon, when he rapidly grew worse. Then, surrounded by his children, grandchildren, and stepchildren—children of his second wife, who predeceased him—conscious almost to the last, manifesting to the end a gentle consideration for others, he closed the wonderful earthly career which had earned for him that title which he loved best, "The Grand Old Man of Maryland," and passed quietly away, serene in his confident faith in the life everlasting.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, we are here to-day to pay the last tribute to the memory of our departed colleague, the Hon. WILLIAM PINKNEY WHYTE, Senator from Maryland.

The word "honorable" has had a varied signification in the political nomenclature of this country. It often has no meaning, and is frequently attached to names that have very little claim to its title. In his case it has a double signification. His life was full of honors, conferred upon him by the people of his State, and as he bore them successively his public and private career was as honorable in all of its acts and deeds as that of any man who ever served his people in the history of this country.

Senator WHYTE was a remarkable man in point of character and ability, and certainly not in my day has our State ever produced anyone who had so firm a hold upon popular confidence and affection as he did. In fact, looking over the history of Maryland, I can safely say, taking his record as a unit—at the bar and in the various professional employments that he filled and the high places that he honored and in the universal esteem that he was held by our people for over half a century—I know of no one who occupied a higher or more distinguished position than he did in the annals of our State.

Coming from a distinguished ancestry, of which fact he was never known to boast and never even to allude to, the representative of an illustrious and honored lineage that was the pride of Maryland in its earlier days and that will continue to reflect glory upon her in all the years to come, it might be supposed that such a descent and such an environment became his easy passports to favor when he entered upon the public career that he had planned for himself in the pursuit of an honorable ambition. This was not the case. He seemed to throw off at the very outset of his career every help and claim that such an influence might be supposed to give and to practically proclaim to the people that he desired nothing from their hands except that which his merits entitled him to. He had made up his mind at an early age to work by honest toil from the bottom round of the ladder to the top, if possible, and never to depend in the slightest degree upon any extraneous influence to lift him into places that his qualifications did not entitle him to hold.

He filled so many posts of honor with such lasting credit that it would be almost impossible to sketch in this brief presentation the history of all that he did and the great and arduous work of his lifetime that he accomplished. It is sufficient to say that he was either elected or appointed to every office that the State of Maryland could give him and which he was willing to accept.

He had a business and a professional and a political training combined. Commencing his active life in one of the largest commercial houses in America, he acquired an experience and knowledge that were of invaluable service to him afterwards in his profession and that for years gave him a reputation in certain of its departments unsurpassed by any of his brethren at the bar. In commercial practice, when it became necessary to investigate in detail the accuracy of complicated accounts, he was the most marvelous hand at our bar to unravel and explain them and discover the slightest mistake or inaccurate entries that they contained.

I remember once an important case in which I was associated with him, in which a large amount of money was involved, embracing partnership settlements that had run over a long period of years, upon which the auditor of one of our courts, himself an expert accountant, had stated an account and certified its accuracy to the court, and which Senator WHYTE had set aside through the discovery of an error in bookkeeping that had not occurred to any one of the numerous counsel who were connected with the case.

When it came to the trial of cases before juries, civil and criminal, when he was at the height of his practice, he stood without a peer. For years and years he was the leading counsel in almost every great criminal case that was tried in our courts, and his success was so wonderful that it would sound like fiction if I were to attempt to recapitulate the verdicts that he secured and the victories that he won. In his palmy days upon the hustings he was incomparable. As has been well said by my colleague, with a commanding presence, with a captivating voice, with ready wit, and a memory for events and individual recollections that seemed to grow stronger as he advanced in years, Senator WHYTE held hundreds of audiences spellbound by the charm and magic of his eloquence.

A man may possess all of these great gifts and still not be personally popular with the masses. This was not his case, however. He was the idol of his fellow-citizens, because he was always easy of approach, never exclusive in the slightest degree, and at all times willing to place himself upon a par with the humblest of his constituents with whom he came in contact.

He possessed another gift that was with him until his death. He had the greatest capacity for untiring and systematic work of anyone whom I ever knew. For years and years I saw him almost daily, but I never saw him disengaged or idle. He was always at work on something. And during almost the whole of the time he held public office, with the exception perhaps of the period during which he was governor of the State, he never relinquished his professional work, but carried it right along, accomplishing the rare feat of being able to bestow his attention upon his practice and at the same time faithfully and assiduously perform the great public trusts that had been committed to him. And, Mr. President, he did loyally perform them. No matter how minute the detail, how tiresome the inquiry, or how laborious the examination, no subject was ever committed to his charge to which he did not devote the concentrated powers of his great intellect.

He filled the office of comptroller of the State of Maryland; he was governor of the State; he held important posts as legal adviser for the municipality of Baltimore; he was mayor of the city; he was attorney-general of Maryland; and three times a member of this body—once to fill the unexpired term of Reverdy Johnson by appointment, second by election of the general assembly, and third by appointment of Governor Warfield to fill the unexpired term of Senator Gorman.

During the whole of his political career he was the type and representative of a generation of constitutional Democrats, who have shed imperishable luster and renown upon the history of their country. He believed in the Constitution of his country as it was written and intended, and not as it has been perverted and disfigured. He was not what we may designate a strict constructionist of its provisions, because he always believed in putting into exercise the powers of the Federal Government whenever the emergency demanded it. He was, however, irrevocably opposed to conferring upon the Federal Government powers that were never intended it should possess. And, so far as the rights of the States were concerned, he stood here in this body and elsewhere as a sentinel upon the watchtower, to protect them from invasion by sounding the alarm whenever an assault was attempted upon their institutions. In this political faith he lived, and in it he died.

There is but one Senator here now who was with him in those stormy and memorable days, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], whose voluntary absence from this body we shall all lament in the years to come. Beyond the Senate, however, the people of Maryland and the Democracy of the Union will never forget the services that Senator WHYTE rendered in their behalf. If Democracy means anything at all, he illustrated it in its truest sense. Time and time again he lifted his voice in this Chamber without avail against political tyranny and oppression, and time and time again he thundered through this Hall the discarded warnings of the Constitution. His last effort in the Senate, when his clarion voice rang as it did in the days of yore, was upon the reserved rights of sovereign States. He pointed to the fact that the States were still sovereign when they acted within their own jurisdiction, and that no emergency justified a violation of their constitutional prerogative or a breach of their inherent rights. Inherent rights of the States and not inherent rights of the Union was the precept of the creed at whose altars he worshiped. He threw aside with lofty disdain the vain conceit of an unwritten constitution which is bewildering the minds of some of our modern statesmen.

He stood upon the basic principle of a constitution with delegated and enumerated powers; and in so far as he was concerned, the billows of political opposition and adversity beat in vain against the bulwark he had reared. His political record affords an example worthy of the profoundest study and the closest emulation. Men like him, Mr. President, do not perish; they perish from the face of the earth, but they live upon the pages of immortality. I mean not merely that their names are honored and their deeds remembered, but that the impression that they have made is indelibly stamped upon the course of history. Their work becomes so interwoven with the spheres of action in which they labor that long after their departure the creation of their minds, even if not written upon the page of history, stamps itself imperishably upon succeeding generations. If the night of forgetfulness and decadence should ever overtake us in our political wanderings, names like his should light and lure us back to the paths of honor and of duty as they flash and sparkle on the firmament.

It must not be inferred, however, Mr. President, from anything I have said that his political career was a placid one. Calmness and tranquillity were not the usual accompaniments of political contests when he led us on to battle in Maryland. Those were days of tumult and contention, when bitter charges were made, and feelings were inflamed, but through it all no one ever attacked the honor of the man. Let it be written down that no personal charge of opprobrium or of dishonor was ever brought against him by his most malignant foe. In one of these contests he waged it almost single handed. There was opposed to him an array of brilliant talent, comprising the flower of the Maryland bar, the foremost men upon the forum's field. A compromise was suggested before the lists were closed, but he refused to yield.

He was of heroic mold; and whether it be right or wrong, there was one political virtue in which he always gloried, and that was his gratitude to his friends. He did not belong to the school of statesmen who believe in using men to further their ambition and then sacrificing them when the occasion demanded it. He was not a theorist or an ingrate in politics, but his blood was warm for those who served him. In this contest he was the center of the storm and the shining mark of the enemy, and he went down to defeat. Defeat did not dismay him and reverses did not intimidate him; and while his friends were still mourning over the disaster, he sprang unsullied back again to the hearts and confidence of the people, and there was no honor with which they could have endowed him that was not at his disposal.

I will not dwell upon the surroundings of his home. He possessed the deepest devotion for his family; and while he never had any ambition to accumulate a large fortune, he was always solicitous for those around him and seemed to be perfectly satisfied if he was able to provide for them every comfort and indulgence they desired. In his own habits he was abstemious to a degree of absolute forbearance, and he pursued a life of self-denial and sacrifice that is rarely to be met with. There was something exquisite about the love he bore for those who were dear to him and the tender and touching care that he bestowed upon them. I was with him at one of the saddest scenes of his life, when his heart was rent in twain with grief and sorrow. I can never forget the way he bore his affliction. It was not the callous philosophy of stoicism. It was an absolute resignation and submission with a spirit of sublime fortitude to the divine will that left an impression upon me that I can never erase and that has often made me feel that of all his virtues I would rather possess this one, so that, imitating him when the shades of night are gathering around my fireside, my spirit could rise above the gloom and behold in its dying embers the reflected vision of a reunited home.

His was the philosophy of faith that never permitted him to question the great truths that are alone worth living and struggling and dying for, and without which human life would only culminate in despair. These truths were axiomatic with him. He never discussed them or allowed himself to doubt them, and he passed upon his journey to the shoreless sea with an unerring confidence in their realization that no reasoning could shake and no visitation of Providence could impair; and without which belief human life would be but the involuntary outcome of a cruel fate, absolutely purposeless and meaningless, with not a ray of divine love to illumine the impenetrable mystery.

Upon one occasion a great philosopher said to a great scientist:

> Your belief in a personal creator and in a future state is at war with your profession; it is all a myth and a fable, and you can not reconcile one with the other.

The answer came:

> Well, even if it be a fable, which I do not believe, it has led me to a better and a purer life. I cherish the ambition that this fable shall be my dying dream, and I will follow it to the grave.

Governor WHYTE in his religious belief was a man of the deepest devotion and the most profound convictions. While as a statesman he worshiped the cardinal principles of the Constitution, as a firm believer in the responsibility of man to God he followed with unfaltering footsteps to his end the cardinal principles of his faith and his church. In every step of his illustrious career there predominated that which is greater than anything he ever did, and that was his unyielding spirit of honor and integrity, which, with the great moral purpose that pervaded his life, enabled him to resist every possible temptation at any time to swerve from the path of duty. He was honest in the fullest and broadest acceptation of the term; honest to such a point of delicacy and refinement in his professional intercourse with his clients that he hardly ever placed a proper estimate upon the valuable services that he performed for them. And in his public life no one would ever have dared by any form of allurement even in the remotest degree to attempt to influence him in the discharge of his public functions.

Thus he lived and thus he died. With us his place will not be filled in the present day at least. It would be difficult to emulate or imitate him, because Providence had given him a combination of virtues and of talents that rarely work in harmony with each other. He needs no monument to commemorate his life. In due time, however, I suppose our State will erect some memento in grateful acknowledgment of his services in her behalf. Such a testimonial, while it would perpetuate his memory, is not necessary to elevate him in the respect or esteem in which he was held by the community among whom he passed his days. His life needs no legend or inscription to adorn it. He has built his own memorial. He has written upon the "eternal skies" the record of a stainless name.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, after the two very eloquent and deserved tributes which have been paid to the memory of Senator WHYTE by the Senators from Maryland, I shall on this occasion content myself with a very few words. The reference made by the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] to the part taken by Senator WHYTE in the deliberations of this body in the great contest which preceded the inauguration of President Hayes has recalled vividly to my mind the services he rendered as a Member of this body, and particularly the zeal and power with which he presented his views on that occasion, when the Senate and the whole country to a great extent were disturbed and uncertain as to the result.

My acquaintance with Senator WHYTE began when I entered this body on the 4th of December, 1876, and with my acquaintance began my friendship for him, which lasted until his days were ended as a member of this body.

Senator WHYTE first became a member of the Senate by appointment of the governor of Maryland, July 14, 1868, to fill the place of Reverdy Johnson, who resigned his seat in the Senate to become minister to England, and he served in that capacity until the 4th of March, 1869, when he resumed the practice of his profession. Soon after the expiration of his term he was elected governor of Maryland, and in 1874 resigned his position as governor and was elected to the Senate. He entered the Senate on the 4th of March, 1875, and served out the full term ending March 4, 1881. He was a lawyer of marked ability, and after the expiration of his term he resumed the practice of law in the city of Baltimore, and soon afterwards was elected mayor of Baltimore, without opposition.

Senator WHYTE came of a good family. His maternal grandfather was a distinguished citizen of Maryland; an attorney-general of the State; a joint minister to Great Britain with James Monroe in 1806 and 1807; Attorney-General of the United States from 1811 to 1814; minister to the two Sicilies; minister plenipotentiary to Russia from 1816 to 1818, and was elected to the United States Senate January 4, 1820, and served until his death, February 22, 1822.

On the death of Senator Gorman Mr. WHYTE was again, on the 8th of June, 1906, appointed by the governor to fill the vacancy, and on the 11th day of that month entered the Senate. He was subsequently elected by the legislature of his State to serve out the unexpired time of Senator Gorman.

Among the members of the Senate of the Forty-fourth Congress at the time of my entrance into this body, and of which Senator WHYTE was a member, were the following: Thomas F. Bayard, of Delaware; Logan, of Illinois; McDonald and Morton, of Indiana; Allison, of Iowa; Ingalls, of Kansas; Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine; Boutwell and Dawes, of Massachusetts; Bogy and Cockrell, of Missouri; Frelinghuysen, of New Jersey; Conkling and Kernan, of New York; Sherman and Thurman, of Ohio; Cameron and Wallace, of Pennsylvania; Edmunds and Morrill, of Vermont; Cameron and Howe, of Wisconsin; Anthony and Burnside, of Rhode Island, and Jones of Nevada.

I need not say that the Forty-fourth Congress was, in membership, a notable one, and Senator WHYTE was an active and influential Member of that Congress. As a constitutional lawyer he took high rank from his entrance into this body. He was a student in all things pertaining to our history and the character of our institutions. He had decided views as to the powers and duties of the General Government. He was familiar with the Constitution and the construction that the Supreme Court of the United States had put on that instrument, and was vigilant that nothing should be done by the State or Nation to lessen in any degree the power conferred on the Nation or reserved to the States. He was a believer in the rights of the States to exercise complete sovereignty when such sovereignty had not been delegated to the Nation and when the welfare and interest of the State demanded such exercise.

He was a citizen of whom the people of his State were proud, as is shown by his last election to the Senate at an age at which most men are required to quit official life. His death was a loss to the Senate, and was keenly felt by his associates in this body. As a Senator he will be remembered as wise and learned; as a man, as courteous in all his intercourse with his fellows. He was a scholar, a statesman, a gentleman—a gentleman in all the word implies.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, although not among those originally expected to participate in these services, I could not let this occasion pass without paying my feeble tribute to the memory of Senator WHYTE unless I was false to one of the closest and tenderest associations and friendships of my life, for, sir, although many years separated us in age and while he was here only a short time after his return to the Senate, for some reason—I never knew why or how—it was my rare privilege to enjoy an intimate association with Senator WHYTE. It was in that association that I learned to know him, to appreciate his spotless character, and to recognize his rare ability. But beyond even character and ability what most won my admiration was the man's courage.

It was my privilege to sit in this Chamber and listen to his last great speech, and while, being of a different political party, I could not subscribe to all that he said, while I realized that in the inevitable trend of affairs on the part of a great people in working out a national destiny we must of necessity pass beyond and perhaps submerge some of the earlier constitutional traditions, I could but feel that it would be far better for this country to-day if there was a force of sentiment and purpose along the line which he pursued in that great argument serving as a check and a balance wheel, a factor to conserve the trend and direction of this people in their progress along a broader and more liberal interpretation of the Constitution. I fully agree with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] that if the time ever comes when disaster shall overwhelm us it will be because we have not listened to admonitions similar to those embodied in that remarkable speech of his—the last great effort of his life in this Chamber.

Mr. President, it was not that alone which so strongly appealed to me. I have among the most cherished papers which I preserve the memoranda of his speech, in which he raised his voice against intolerance. It was, sir, this courage, this willingness to stand against the trend of conditions to-day, this willingness to voice, out of his great genius, his experience, and his devotion to the Constitution, what he believed just and right, that so won my admiration and which, while years separated us, made us, during the period of his brief return to the Senate, such close and intimate friends.

I only wish, Mr. President, that occasion had presented the opportunity for a more fitting tribute to his memory. The few words I have uttered have come from the heart and are not the product of preparation. But sir, above and beyond this was the grand Christian character of that man, and as he laid down his armor, as his eyes closed upon the scenes of this life he looked forward to another; and as we recall the splendid character of the man we may well say of him:

> The weary sun hath made a golden set,
> And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
> Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I move that, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, January 18, 1909, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 16, 1909.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Clerk, Hon. Alexander McDowell, who read the following communication:

I designate Hon. JOHN DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, to serve as Speaker pro tempore, House of Representatives, for this day.

J. G. CANNON, Speaker.

JANUARY 16, 1909.

Thereupon Mr. DALZELL took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer was offered by the Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 26394) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. PADGETT reserved all points of order.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the pension appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BUTLER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 26203, the pension appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1910, and for other purposes, namely:

For army and navy pensions, as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, army nurses, and all other pensioners who are now borne on the rolls, or who may hereafter be placed thereon, under the provisions of any and all acts of Congress, $160,000,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the navy pension fund, so far as the same shall be sufficient for that purpose: Provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, for services rendered within the fiscal year 1910, $500,000.

For salary of one agent for the payment of pensions, $4,000.

For clerk hire, and other services, in the pension agencies, $335,000: Provided, That the amount of clerk hire, and other services, and the salaries paid shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

For stationery and other necessary expenses, $30,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall hereafter furnish free to all pensioners franked or penalty envelopes, properly addressed, to be used by said pensioners only for the return of their pension vouchers.

The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby authorized and directed, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to arrange the pensioners, for the payment of pensions, in three groups as he may think proper; and he may from time to time change any pensioner from one group to another as he may deem convenient for the transaction of the public business. The pensioners in the first group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on January 4, April 4, July 4, and October 4 of each year; the pensioners in the second group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on February 4, May 4, August 4, and November 4 of each year; and the pensioners in the third group shall be paid their quarterly pensions on March 4, June 4, September 4, and December 4 each year. The Commissioner of Pensions is hereby fully authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to cause payments of pensions to be made for the fractional parts of quarters created by such change so as to properly adjust all payments as herein provided.

In case of sickness or unavoidable absence of the agent for payment of pensions from his office, the Commissioner of Pensions may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, authorize the chief clerk of his office or some other clerk employed therein to temporarily act as such agent for payment of pensions.

And with the approval of the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, the agent for payment of pensions may designate and authorize the necessary number of clerks to sign the name of the agent for payment of pensions to official checks.

The official bond given by the agent for payment of pensions shall be held to cover and apply to the acts of the person appointed to act in his place.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this time to discuss the merits of the appropriation bill for the payment of pensions. There have been several applications for time in general debate, and I now propose to give way for general debate to those Members who have applied. Later on I expect to address the committee in reference to the bill. I now yield one-half hour to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio yields one-half of his time to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand that I was yielding out of my time. I yielded one-half hour for the purpose of indicating the time that the gentleman from Wisconsin should take in his own right for general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no arrangement for the control of time on either side. As far as the Chair understands, when the gentleman from Ohio yields time he yields it out of his own time.

Mr. KEIFER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to control the time, dividing it as may be requested on either side, or for the gentleman from Mississippi to control the time on that side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to control by himself the time on his side, and the other half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BOWERS].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Do I understand that the time is to be equally divided?

The CHAIRMAN. It is understood without further specification that the time will be equally divided between the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is the short session, and I do not think that any Member should be yielded more than one hour. If the gentleman from Ohio will include in that request that no Member shall be yielded more than an hour, I will not object.

Mr. KEIFER. I have assumed, Mr. Chairman, that I would not have the right, nor anybody else, to yield more than one hour to any one Member.

Mr. CURRIER. I think the gentleman from Ohio is right—that he can yield only one hour.

Mr. PAYNE. That has not been the custom of the House.

Mr. CURRIER. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but it has been repeatedly held in the House, and when I have been presiding myself and two or three hours' time has been yielded, I have invariably stopped the Member at the end of every hour.

Mr. PAYNE. I have often seen the Member in control of the time yield more than an hour, two hours, and even three hours, and I think it is important that the gentleman from Ohio should include this in his request.

Mr. KEIFER. I will repeat that it was my understanding that there was no right to yield more than one hour to one person; but if there is any doubt about it, I will include the suggestion of the gentleman from New York in my request.

Mr. BOWERS. I did not understand the gentleman from Ohio to put any limit to the time of general debate.

Mr. KEIFER. None whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been customary at the end of the hour for the Chairman to notify the speaker that his time has expired. After the conclusion of his hour, oftentimes, the gentleman speaking has had his time extended by the Member who yielded to him or by some other gentleman yielding to him.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not want to interfere with unanimous consent, but I want it understod that no man shall have the right under a yielding of time to speak longer than one hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Ohio to include in his request that no Member should be permitted to speak more than one hour without the consent of the committee?

Mr. KEIFER. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that satisfactory to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. BOWERS. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to have an opportunity to express my views upon a very important subject. I am anxious to give publicity to my views on a question that I want to discuss, because there is so much said in the country to-day about the so-called "Sherman law," and it seems to me that there is a great deal of misunderstanding in reference to this important subject. I read in the newspapers that a committee of intellectual and capable gentlemen from different parts of this country have been selected to see what beneficial changes can be made in the so-called "Sherman law," and at the same time the Committee on the Judiciary have been severely criticised and attacked because they have not reported out some amendments to that act. I simply want to present my personal views for the purpose of showing how important is the subject and how difficult it is to make the necessary amendments. Therefore I ask this question:

CAN THE SO-CALLED "SHERMAN ACT" BE BENEFICIALLY AMENDED?

There is so much said about amending the Sherman law, an act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies, passed July 2, 1890, that it may be profitable to examine it and all of its surroundings.

It declares illegal every contract, combination, any form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations; and further provides that every person who shall make any such contract or engage in such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and punished accordingly. The question can be answered categorically without hesitation, but the answer will shed no light or impart any information on a subject interesting and important. It must be answered in the light of the Constitution.

Notwithstanding constitutional difficulties, the broad and well-worded title of the act, there are important factions diametrically opposed to each other, demanding that the act be amended. One, so as to destroy trusts and combinations and reduce the chance to increase wealth; the other to permit the making of commercial contracts not in unreasonable restraint of trade and commerce. Another, that the act shall not be enforced so as to interfere with or to restrict any right of employees to strike for any cause or to combine or to contract with each other or with employers for the purpose of peaceably obtaining from employers satisfactory terms for their labor or satisfactory conditions of employment, or so as to interfere with or to restrict any right of employers for any cause to discharge all or any of their employees or to combine or to contract with each other or with employees for the purpose of peaceably obtaining labor on satisfactory terms; and, if amended, the title of the act should be amended so as to read:

An act to violate the Constitution and to refuse protection to personal and property rights, trade, and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies.

The statute is both prohibitory and penal. The power to penalize the statute is ample, and this feature can be amended so as to punish those entering into any contract, combination, or any form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations.

The prohibitory part of the statute is unauthorized and absolutely unnecessary, therefore no amendment of value can be made to the same. All demands for amendments can be answered by the Constitution. The Constitution provides that Congress shall regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign nations. When adopted, what was the condition of affairs in this country? What change contemplated by the Constitution? What remedy created? What mischief suppressed? Each State regulated commerce between the several States; the same article, both out and in. That is, if a party was going to take his produce out of the State of New York into Maryland, both States could not only regulate but prohibit, and it could only depart and enter upon conditions imposed by the interested States. And it was thought best to have but one regulating power. The only thing sought at the time was protection to interstate and foreign commerce from State interference, but the power was made sufficiently broad to prevent interference with interstate or foreign commerce from any source.

The power and duty of Congress is to protect interstate and foreign commerce in transit, and to make all laws necessary and proper to carry this power into execution. If an article not commerce is seeking transportation from one State into another, Congress can prohibit its transfer for the reason that it is not commerce. It is a very important question whether Congress can exclude from commercial intercourse what are proper and lawful subjects or articles of commerce.

It is very clear from what the Supreme Court of the United States has said that it is a very important question whether Congress can exclude from commercial intercourse what is proper and lawful subjects or articles of commerce. Field, J., in Bowman v. Chicago and N. W. Ry. Co. (125 U. S., 501), said:

What is an article of commerce is determinable by the usages of the commercial world, and does not depend upon the declaration of any State.

Fuller, C. J., in Lottery cases (188 U. S., 371), said:

To say that the mere carrying of an article which is not an article of commerce in and of itself nevertheless becomes such the moment it is to be transported from one State to another is to transform a noncommercial article into a commercial one simply because it is transported. I can not conceive that any such result can properly follow.

In Groves v. Slaughter, 15 Peters, 449 (1841), the court said:

That Congress can not lay an embargo upon interstate commerce.

In Dooley v. United States (183 U. S., 151, p. 171), the minority of the court was discussing the power of Congress in this regard, and Chief Justice Fuller said:

But if that power of regulation is absolutely unrestricted as respects interstate commerce, then the very unity the Constitution was framed to secure can be set at naught by a legislative body created by that instrument.

Such a conclusion is wholly inadmissible. The power to regulate interstate commerce was granted in order that trade between the States might be left free from discriminating legislation and not to impart the power to create antagonistic commercial relations between them.

The prohibition of preference of ports was coupled with the prohibition of taxation on articles exported. The citizens of each State were declared "entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States," and that included the right of ingress and egress and the enjoyment of the privileges of trade and commerce. (Slaughterhouse cases, 16 Wall., 36.)

Justices Harlan, Brewer, and Peckham concurred in the opinion of the Chief Justice. While this appears in the dissent, it unquestionably represents the views of the court, as there is nothing said in the majority opinion in conflict with what was said by the Chief Justice in his opinion.

An important question to determine is, What is commerce? The word "commerce" is not defined by the Constitution. Congress has not defined the word, but its meaning has been defined by the courts, and it is to the Supreme Court of the United States, in its many cases, that we have to look to ascertain what is included in the word "commerce."

It is more than traffic. It includes navigation, intercourse, transportation of passengers, interchange and transportation of commodities or visible and tangible things, transmission by telegraph, electrically transmitting of articulate speech by telephone.

Lawful subjects of commerce are determined by the generally accepted opinion of the commercial world, subject to the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, as to whether or not a given article is a proper subject of commerce. But in many cases it might properly be said it is largely a question of good judgment, for the foundation of the whole subject, in a limited sense, is exchange of commodities and transportation of the same.

The power to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations is by the Constitution exclusively committed to Congress, and Congress can not delegate nor in any manner part with this exclusive authority. The power is not only exclusive, but limited to regulating commerce between the States and with foreign nations, and any attempt by contract or otherwise to regulate commerce between the States or with foreign nations is void.

The talk about amending the Sherman law practically amounts to nothing, as the prohibitory part is of no effect. The penal part is the only thing of value, as Congress has a right to make it a penal offense to regulate or restrain commerce between the States or with foreign nations. It does not need an act of Congress to prevent the regulation of commerce between the States or with foreign nations by contract or otherwise. Any such contract is void and can be annulled by a court without legislation. Congress can only interfere when some other power regulates or attempts to regulate or restrain or attempts to restrain commerce between the States and with foreign nations, or enters into a contract that on its face provides for regulating and restraining commerce between States or with foreign nations, or that in its performance would regulate or restrain commerce between the States or with foreign nations; therefore Congress has no power to permit the making of any contract. The power of Congress being limited to protecting the product in transit, it has nothing whatever to do with the making of any contract, unless the contract undertakes to regulate commerce between the States or with foreign nations. Congress can not abrogate its functions and delegate to any person, corporation, or State its functions to regulate commerce among the States or with foreign nations by contract or otherwise.

The doctrine of the fathers was and the commercial clause of the Constitution was framed upon the theory that commerce between the States and with foreign nations should and must be free and not regulated by contracts in restraint of trade, if not in unreasonable restraint of trade.

Commerce would not be free if regulated by the fluctuating, uncertain, relative, and elastic term "not in unreasonable restraint of trade." No standard could ever be erected or adopted by which it could be judged or defined. One case would not be a precedent for another subsequent one. Those claiming injury by the contract would be subjected to expensive and long-time litigation to obtain freedom of commerce granted by the Constitution. As the power of Congress is exclusive, it is not necessary for Congress to declare that its exclusive power shall not be exercised by any person, corporation, or State.

As so aptly said by Taney, C. J., in the License cases (5 How., 504):

> It can hardly be contended that an act of Congress can alter the Constitution.
> As far as the power of Congress is concerned, to interfere with private contracts, it is limited by the Constitution to contracts designed to restrain or regulate commerce between the States or with foreign nations.
> Congress can not annul private contracts not designed to restrain or regulate interstate commerce. (Ry. Co. v. Richmond, 19 Wall., 584. Addystone Pipe and Steel Co. v. U. S., 175 U. S., 211.)

To permit the making of contracts not in unreasonable restraint of trade, even if not in violation of the Constitution, would be class legislation of the most dangerous character. In short, the courts can, without any legislation, do all that can now be done under the act except to punish criminally those who violate the Constitution by regulating or restraining commerce between the States and with foreign nations.

A great many business interests protest against the act and insists that its broad and drastic provisions prevent the making of commercial contracts of great benefit to contracting parties and in the interest of trade and commerce generally. This is a mistake. The prohibitory part of the statute is simply declaratory of the power enumerated in the Constitution, declaring what shall be illegal when the same is illegal by virtue of the Constitution, giving Congress exclusive power to regulate commerce between the several States and with foreign nations, the statute is not broader than the Constitution. Unless in violation of the Constitution, Congress can not prevent the making of a contract, and Congress can not give anyone permission to make a contract in violation of the Constitution. The only protection Congress has is to punish as criminal what is done in violation of the Constitution.

It will be a very difficult matter for any lawyer or any person that might be considered a student of constitutional law to be able to satisfy a thinking public that Congress has got any right to interfere with or restrict any right of employees to strike or to contract with each other or with employers. The line of demarcation between state and federal power is too plainly marked to mislead anybody upon this point.

As long as they make no combinations or enter into any conspiracy or make any contract to regulate or restrain interstate commerce, Congress has no power to deal with them.

These conclusions irresistibly follow:

Congress can not interfere with any private contract, unless it is one made in restraint or regulation of commerce between the States. As its power is exclusive, Congress can not affirmatively permit the making of any contract that on its face or in its performance will regulate or restrain interstate commerce. No prohibitory legislation is necessary, as the power of Congress is exclusive, and any attempt to interfere with or usurp the power of Congress is void. Without any legislation, the courts can nullify any contract made in violation of the exclusive power of Congress. To declare the violation of the exclusive power of Congress a crime and punish it as such is necessary to prevent violations. The power of Congress is limited to protecting interstate commerce in transit.

Congress can not legislatively permit any interference with commerce between the States or with foreign nations. It is superfluous legislation to declare illegal every contract, combination, any form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce between the States. It does not need an act of Congress to declare illegal what is void by the Constitution, as exclusive power is vested in Congress to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations. Congress does not possess the power to legalize contracts regulating commerce between the States or with foreign nations, and if the contract is a regulation it is void. If not, it is within the power of Congress to affect it.

It is for the courts to say, without the aid of legislation, whether a given contract is void for usurping congressional power to regulate commerce. If the trust mentioned in the act is not regulating or restraining commerce between the States or with foreign nations, Congress is powerless to operate or affect the trust mentioned. As the power of Congress is limited to regulating commerce between the States and with foreign nations, Congress can not do anything other than what may be necessary to carry this power into execution. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WATSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 7639. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise certain lands in the State of Minnesota for the purpose of granting the same to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company for a ballast pit; and

S. 7764. An act for the relief of J. Randolph Peyton.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 12499) for the relief of Clarence Frederick Chapman, U. S. Navy, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DICK, Mr. MARTIN, and Mr. SMITH of Maryland as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NYE].

Mr. NYE. Mr. Chairman, I shall undertake to offer a few general observations on law and lawbreakers. What I shall say of law is not intended as a contribution to the learning of the profession, but I desire to base my thought largely upon what I deem to be the primary law, from which man's law, so far as it is enduring, must be derived, that supreme command forever commanding what is right and prohibiting what is wrong. The advance of nations toward a purer civilization must depend almost wholly upon their fidelity to high and worthy ideals. The artist must have his model; so public thought, in order to shape laws that are just, humane, and wise, and in order to secure a wholesome administration, must enthrone some ideal of government. I believe in a government in which the sources of life may be found in the moral, intellectual, and spiritual wellsprings of its being.

No government can succeed and long endure that utterly ignores these sources of its strength and power. This Nation, the pride and glory of the centuries, thrives and prospers only as it recognizes in its daily life the supreme and divine order which forever commands the right and prohibits the wrong. I am no pessimist. I believe in that evolution and advancement of human society which is based upon the belief that the universe is planned for good and that the Great Lawgiver has His way after all in the end. One poet has said:

> Ill fares the land, to hast'ning ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

I am aware that my remarks may be somewhat unusual in a legislative body, but I feel prompted to make them, and I know that they will be received for whatever the committee may deem them to be worth, and I am prompted to announce the doctrine as I entertain it—that this is essentially a Christian government. I do not mean it in any narrow sense; I do not mean that it may exclude that which is good in other religions of the world, but I mean that the essential and fundamental idea, the sources of the nation's life, spring from the teachings of the golden rule and good will to men proclaimed by the Great Founder of that religion, and on that this Government of a free and progressive people is based. I shall therefore present, in a general and no doubt very imperfect way, some thoughts which I entertain as to these essential teachings. According to a scriptural narrative, on one occasion a young man said to the Great Teacher:

> Speak to my brother that he divide the inheritance.

The Great Teacher answered:

> Who made me a judge or a divider over men? Beware of covetousness, for a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth.

Mr. Chairman, neither does a nation's life consist in the abundance of the things which it possesses. I think sometimes this is a civilization of property—property, property, nothing but property. We seem to be buried and smothered at times in vast production and vast wealth, and to forget the inner and essential life, both of the individual and of the Nation.

The belief that a nation's life is existent in these material things is an illusion. It matters not what vast commerce may move upon the land or blossom on the sea, how abundant are the opportunities of wealth—so much so that all men become intoxicated, if you will—still, if we forget the principles of humanity and good will to men, and forget the basis and foundation of this Republic, we are doomed. I do not fear that we will go down, for I am a believer in its splendid triumph; and I predict now—I may be visionary—a day not hidden in the night of future centuries, but almost breaking with the dawn of to-morrow, when that era of good feeling and justice among classes, among industries, among capital and labor, and in all the industrial world will so predominate that in the light of this principle of right and justice and humanity and equality we shall solve, and permanently and rightly solve, all problems which vex us to-day.

After making that statement, which calls attention to the vital principle of the great law which the Master came to expound. He proceeds with a wonderful parable, plain, simple, but one not inappropriate to refer to at this time. He seemed to give it to clinch His statement that we should beware of covetousness, and that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesses. I shall not undertake to quote it verbatim, but I can give it in substance. He said:

> The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully, and this rich man said to himself: "What shall I do? Where shall I bestow all my fruits and all my goods? This will I do: I will tear down my barns and build greater, and there I will bestow all of my fruits and my goods, and I will say to my soul: 'Soul, thou hast much goods laid up for future years.'"

He was laying it up, you see, for the future.

> Take thine ease; eat, drink, and be merry.

In the light of the real law, which is the basis of government of a free people, I should say that this man was a very great egotist, a mighty important and conceited fellow. "My goods, my fruits, my barns." He could not call down a drop of rain or dew or a ray of sun; he could not stay the early frost nor beat back the storm. He had produced nothing, and probably so far as human agency had contributed to the production it had been done by the men who had toiled in the heat and burden of the day to fill his barns. An egotist. If he had been a little kinder, moved by the impulses of love, generosity, and good will toward perhaps the very men who had filled his barns, he would not have been required to build a larger one. But divine and infinite wisdom said, according to the parable:

> Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee: then whose shall those things be?
> So is he that layeth up treasure for himself, and is not rich toward God.

That is, does not recognize the source of every good and perfect gift, the source of all enduring law. The parable may not be misapplied to a nation, not perhaps this Nation more than others, but to human society in the aggregate, and we American people are somewhat boastful. We boast of our vast material resources, our mighty wealth and commerce, our engines in the mines of South Africa, our steel rails traversing the plains of Siberia, our cotton and our flour in the Orient, our productions all over the earth, and our vast supremacy among the nations of the world. We have ever boasted and professed to be a Christian nation. The real and permanent expression of this great law is the expression of unity, of the relation of all things, and of one common brotherhood. All is one. The leaf at the top of the tree may look down to the rootlet far under the earth and say, "We are one." The spark struck from the miner's hammer down in the chambers of night may flash out to the great sun and say, "We are one." The little lake hidden in the crevice of the mountain may look over to the vast sea and say, "We are one;" continents and islands are all of one mother earth, washed by one common sea; "all is one."

And if we come to the blind and selfish commercial world in which we live, we find in spite of all we have to in some degree obey this great law which compels us to recognize our neighbor. The farmer plows and sows to feed the thousands he will never see; the miner toils down in the chambers of night to enrich those he will never see; the sailor climbs the mast above the wild waves to protect the lives of those on board whom he does not know; the physician hurries to the bedside of the sick and dying stranger with the fidelity of a friend; the lawyer pleads the cause of the outcast, of the vicious, aye, of the criminal, whose deeds he can not approve, with a fidelity born of the ethics of his noble profession; the clergyman preaches and prays for saint and sinner alike; the mother gives her life for her family and her children; the father wears out his body and his years in their support; armies of toilers go to their work before the sun rises, and return at night, obedient to the law that man can not live to himself alone. This is the supreme edict, it seems to me, of this great law—the law of unison. Now, who are the lawbreakers? In my practice in the profession I spent most of my years in the criminal side of the court, prosecuting or defending, mainly in prosecution. I studied the law somewhat, but I have studied more the ethical foundation of our criminal law, and I have come to the conclusion that all crime, in its last analysis, is the effort of the individual to live to himself alone. Whether they be crimes of malice and hate and revenge, avarice or lust or whatever class, in the last analysis, from the smallest criminal to the greatest, he simply disobeys the great primary law, the law which we profess is the fundamental law of this American Republic—to do unto others as we would be done by.

If this be true—and I challenge its earnest and thoughtful study, in principle—if this be true, how are we going to say who the lawbreakers are? The most important point that I have in mind to-day is this, That we should be a little more careful how we throw stones at anybody. If we do a good deal of hard work to take out the beam from our own eye before we proceed to the more difficult task of extracting the mote from our neighbor's eye, the country would be a great deal better off. The tendency, however, of our day to inquire into the conduct of men both in public and private affairs and in the business and industrial world, I think, results in general good and general benefit. While it may have some very unpleasant and unwholesome accompaniments, while it may tend to feed the public mind with sensationalism and for a moment may seem to degrade all men to a common basis of dishonesty, yet

I believe that on the whole it will be beneficial, because it directs the public mind to the real sources of our national life and strength. It induces a study of the fundamental principles which underlie government and which give it its life and its spirit, and I trust and believe that, on the whole, it may be beneficial. Better ideals may be enthroned.

But, pursuing a little further this thought of the lawbreakers, in the first place, to determine who the real lawbreakers are, everything depends upon our conception of the law itself. What laws do they break? What is the real law? Let us not forget in the discussion that from the morning of creation the men who were willing to die for truth, and have died for it, were numbered among the transgressors. They drank the hemlock, they went to the stake, they were burned, they were drawn and quartered, they went to crucifixion and death, because in their day the real law was not understood or comprehended. Washington might have gone down to history as a traitor, even, under man's law. But under the supreme law of the Supreme Lawgiver, in the light of ages, these men will shine transcendent when all who seem to be in authority in their day are dust.

We need to study these questions. We are the representatives of that which is best in our national life. We are not the representatives of classes, of wealth or of poverty, of capital or of labor, but of that which is best in the spirit and source of our national power, and which includes capital and labor—all classes and all interests, all humanity and all races, and all conditions.

Now, so much for that class that the world adjudged in their day lawbreakers. They were not lawbreakers. They were the real law obeyers. They were the men who understood the law on which all law must stand. Neither this nation, nor any other nation since the morning of creation, has written or enacted a law that was permanent or enduring which was not derivative of the principles of the golden rule, the Sermon on the Mount, and good will to men. But when we come to consider lawbreakers on the plane of man's law and as we generally understand lawbreakers, then we have a great problem on our hands, for I think we are all more or less in it, and when we get the beam out of our eyes and examine the question we find that we have got the same disease that the other fellow has.

A great deal is said of monopolies. Why, monopoly is not confined to corporations or large monopolies. It is a principle in the human heart, and we can not legislate it out by human enactment, but we can eliminate it in the process of time in proportion as we are just and right ourselves. This man spoken of in the parable was not incorporated. He was a little horticulturist over there in the East, with a little piece of ground, but he was laying up the fruits and goods for future years, and he was an egotist and a fool. But the vast mass of humanity, including us all, are lawbreakers—that is, we are violators to some degree of the law, which is the essential and the only enduring law. They attributed to Lincoln the expression at one time—but I doubt if he ever made it—that human society was divided into two classes, the caught and the uncaught. And to-day, if we were honest with ourselves and undertook to make a real division, we would not be far out of the way to make it in that manner. We have violated the law about loving our neighbor as ourselves. We have sought to appropriate a portion of the garment of truth to ourselves.

The capitalist has been too much inclined to think that he was the power that moved the world, and labor, or men who have spoken for it, have sought to impress the country with the idea that the world rests on labor alone. It does not rest on either capital or labor alone. It is all one. Labor has not produced all that is great. Labor and thought, or thought and labor combined, have wrought the miracle of the age and the miracle of every age.

Thought and labor have spun webs of steel that have crossed chasms and bridged rivers; thought and labor have bored the mountains, built highways, planted civilization, touched the springs of industry, opened the fountains of philanthropy, and planted the flowers of benevolence and the fruit of faith and love along the pathway of civilization. All is one. And when we undertake to segregate and say this is the influence that has wrought the miracle, it is a great mistake; absolute unity and the unification of all in one are necessary in order to accomplish real civilization. It may be said to the glory of the workingmen of America that they are the inventors as a rule. While their hands have wrought their brains have thought, and they have wrought out the inventions that have lightened toil and made multiplication of production possible in the world. I might say it is the "thinking hand" that works the miracle, but all is one. Shall the head say to the hand, "I have no need of thee," or shall the hand say to the foot, "I have no need of thee?" All is one, as much as the human personality is one, and complete justice and good health require recognition of it by all classes and all industries.

Unity is the motto written everywhere by this law, which rules in all the universe, from the rolling worlds in space to the falling leaf. No truth is inconsistent with any other truth. All is one; and as we understand this we become enlightened. Truth does not change. It is forever the same. But man's comprehension of it enlarges, unfolds, as the flower opens to the day and vines turn to the sun. Truth remains ever the same. And the lessons which truth reveals in our day, and which I believe is foremost in the minds of thinking people, is the necessity of recognizing unity in our system of business and industry and the unity of our people and our common country. Our beautiful Nation seems to me, in the political history of the world, the most mighty and splendid symbol of this principle of unity. Bound together by ties unseen, and which no human law, I trust, can change or eradicate, bound by the ties of a common kindred, this Nation, in spite of all the contests of the past, stands as a symbol of that unity of which I have spoken. For twoscore years or more time has gradually and beautifully blended the blue and the gray in a vast arch of brotherhood as broad and as ample as the Republic which it spans. [Applause.]

These, I trust, gentlemen, are no idle words; and I say, by the memory of the spirit of our Government—which is greater than its written law, greater than all its material wealth—by the memory of the fatherly Washington, and by the tender memory of the loving Lincoln; by all our inspiring history; by the memory of a hundred battlefields; by the memories of conflicts in the past; and by virtue of the ideals which we enthrone for the future, let us as a Nation, and let us as Representatives of the Nation, recognize that the supreme fundamental law of this Republic is the golden rule—"Do unto thy neighbor as thou wouldst be done by." I thank you. [Loud applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. I yield, out of the time of the gentleman from Mississippi, to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, on the 8th of last May, during the discussion of the bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs to make the Porto Rican Provisional Regiment of Infantry permanent, the discussion took quite a wide range, involving the relation between Porto Rico and the United States. At that time I expressed my intention, at the first opportunity, of saying something further upon this subject, and this I now desire to do.

During that discussion I indicated my opinion, formed during a visit to the island, that the present feeling of the Porto Ricans for the American flag was not a friendly one, and that I thought this unfriendliness to be unwarranted. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] declared, in reply to what I had said, that the unfriendly feeling of Porto Rico toward the United States was justified by our treatment of that island; and furthermore declared that if we keep the Porto Ricans in the status in which they now are—

> Within ten years from now there will not only be an unfriendly feeling toward America in Porto Rico, but there will be a hatred equal to that which the Irish feel for England.

If this were so, it would be a strange commentary upon our dealing with the people of that island. But I do not believe that any unbiased person, considering the present and the past conditions of life—social, political, and material—in the island of Porto Rico, will concur in so pessimistic a view of present conditions there.

Politically, socially, and materially the ten years of our occupation of the island of Porto Rico has witnessed a development and an improvement which is a just and hearty occasion for pride to the American people. In the debate last May, to which I have referred, the Commissioner from Porto Rico put into the RECORD a speech made by the leader of his party, Munoz Rivera, in the Porto Rican house of delegates. In the course of that speech the leader of the Unionist party in Porto Rico declared that in 1897 Spain had recognized the right of the Porto Ricans to self-government, and had given them, to use his own language:

> A system of government more complete and more dignified than that of Canada and Australia.

And, continuing, the orator declared:

> Our hard feelings were turned into sincere love, because servitude had disappeared, because liberty was dawning.

It will be something of a surprise to many Americans to learn that even the appearance of autonomy had been granted by Spain to Porto Rico the year before the American occupation. Without dwelling at too great length upon a comparison of the form of government granted by Spain to Porto Rico in 1897 and the form of government now existing in Porto Rico as established by ourselves, I will undertake to show that the present American system of government in Porto Rico is far more "complete," far more "dignified," far more free, and far more just to the Porto Ricans than that then granted by Spain.

Under this decree of November 25, 1897, the governor-general represented not the people of Porto Rico, but the King of Spain. He had power to appoint all of the officers of the insular government. He had the power to pardon or reprieve criminals. He had the right to promulgate or to suspend the laws. In the name of the King he could call or prorogue a session of the insular legislature. He had power to suspend, if in his opinion public order required it, certain essential guaranties relating to personal liberty, and in effect to declare martial law. And to enforce all this authority, he was made commander in chief of all the land and naval forces of the island. It is idle to pretend that such powers as these are consistent with any reasonable degree of local autonomy or of political liberty.

The upper house of the so-called "parliament" was composed of 15 members, who must each be the owner of real estate yielding an annual revenue of 4,000 pesos, or Spanish dollars; and of those 15 rich landowners, 7 were to be appointed by the governor-general. The lower house was composed of 1 representative for each 2,500 inhabitants. Moreover, this insular parliament was not permitted to make any appropriations of money for purely insular purposes until what was called the "state budget" was provided for—such as the army and navy, the church (which in 1897 enjoyed a revenue of $235,000 from the insular treasury), post-offices, coast defenses, quarantine light-houses, etc. The duty on goods and products passing from Porto Rico to Spain and from Spain to Porto Rico was to be fixed by agreement between the island and the mother country.

To say that such a "system of government was more complete and dignified than that of Canada or Australia" requires no comment.

It should finally be noted that this "law of autonomy for Porto Rico," as it was called, was enacted, not by the Spanish Parliament, but by a royal decree of the King of Spain, and its continuance was wholly within his pleasure.

It is hardly necessary to compare such a government—here briefly, but I believe fairly, outlined—with the government established in Porto Rico by the so-called "Foraker Act" and subsequent laws. Our governor of Porto Rico has no such powers as those above enumerated. The one regiment of Porto Rican soldiers are not even under his control. This regiment is supported wholly from the National Treasury; and so with the post-office, and 95 per cent of the post-office employees are native Porto Ricans. The coast defenses, quarantine stations, naval station, and light-house service are all paid for out of the United States Treasury; and we are expending more in harbor improvements in one appropriation than all that the King of Spain expended for this purpose from 1508 to 1898. Furthermore, it was the common practice of Spain to take funds from the Porto Rican treasury to suppress insurrection in Cuba or for other uses, and large sums on this account were due from Spain to Porto Rico at the time of the American occupation. In contrast to this, we have turned $3,000,000 into the insular treasury to be used wholly for insular improvements, and every dollar of their customs collections go into the insular treasury. We have turned over to the insular government all of the public lands on the island and all public buildings, and we are now erecting new buildings at the national expense.

I need not dwell at length upon the evidence and the proof of the material improvement and prosperity that has come to this densely populated island since and as incident to the American occupation. Everyone, even the most ardent advocate of independence, admits it. No one can go there; no one can seek, from reports and books, information on the subject without realizing that in substantially every direction the conditions of life and the material prosperity of the people have improved to a degree that fills our hearts with satisfaction and with pride.

The very rugged topography of this beautiful little island does and will compel it to depend largely for inland travel and transportation upon its ordinary highways. Most of these have been improved, and some wonderfully fine roads wholly constructed under American management. The splendid new road across the island from Arecibo to Ponce is certainly one of the most beautiful drives in the world, and several important branches to the fine old military road from San Juan to Ponce have been built. Schoolhouses filled to overflowing with eager happy children are seen everywhere. Diseases which almost decimated the population have been brought under scientific control. Peace and good order prevail; and justice is administered, substantially for the first time in the history of the island, without bribery, without fear, and without favor.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Has the system of having some American judges in the island of Porto Rico—or all of them Americans, as far as I know; I admit a good deal of ignorance on the subject—proved successful or unsuccessful?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think it has proved successful. There are only a few American judges left on the island. Nearly all the judges, both of the municipal and district courts, are Porto Ricans, and some of them men of great ability and fine character.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I thank the gentleman for the information.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The sugar and tobacco industries have grown by leaps and bounds. In each the independent operators are successfully competing with the so-called "trusts." In spite of the devastation of the forests, which shelter the coffee plantations, by the awful cyclone of August 8, 1899, the coffee industry is reviving. The Porto Rican coffee is one of the most delicious in the world, and this industry should certainly be favored and assisted by our laws. Wages have more than doubled under the new régime, so that in this hot and fruitful land, where nature is so liberal of the gifts of the soil, where frost is unknown and the necessities of shelter and clothing are reduced to a minimum, a month's work will supply for a year to the peon such necessities as the teeming soil will not produce.

If then it be true, as it is true, that the ten years of American occupation have brought such marked improvement, political, social, and material, to the island and to the people of Porto Rico, why is it nevertheless true that when, upon the plaza at San Juan, the band of the Porto Rican regiment plays our Star-Spangled Banner and every American present rises and stands uncovered, the natives all sit in sullen silence?

The fault is both theirs and ours. They certainly have shown in many respects a lack of appreciation of what has already been accomplished in their behalf; and this discontent has undoubtedly been fostered and augmented by their political leaders for their own purposes.

On the other hand, I believe that we, too, have failed to appreciate the feelings of a sensitive people. We have disappointed their reasonable expectations and wounded their pride by keeping them too long in a state of political tutelage.

The Porto Ricans are a unique and interesting people. I doubt if anywhere else the three races, Caucasian, American-Indian and negro, have become so mixed. Under Spanish law they were divided into white, gray, and brown, but these nominal orders certainly fade indistinguishably into one another. About half of the million or more people on the island are called white; and among many of these their original Indian blood is plainly noticeable, as well as, in many of them, their negro blood.

About half of the population is illiterate, but it is hard to overestimate their eagerness to learn. Their quickness of apprehension, especially as evidenced among the children in the schools, is spoken of by everyone who has come into contact with them as extraordinary. As a race they are docile, law-abiding, peaceable, hospitable, and kindly. At the same time, like most Latin-American people, they are excitable and volatile. The lightest argument about any trivial matter is apt to be carried on with a rapidity of utterance, violent gesticulation, and an intensity of feeling quite out of keeping with the real importance of the matter under discussion. They are far more governed by sentiment than by reason, and this makes them especially amenable to the influence of their orators. One of the most intelligent and partial of their American critics, a man who dwelt among them for five years, wrote:

> There is probably nothing in the prospect of Porto Rico so dark, so full of peril as the prominence of the eloquent politician. He is very apt to prove a most malignant curse among a people so easily affected by florid vociferation and cantankerous rhetoric.

Some of these leaders mislead them with selfish appeals for and vain hopes of independence. With independence they, or some of them, would soon become the virtual rulers of the island.

But surely the American Republic can not afford to indulge in any pique over the failure of these people to appreciate what has been done for them, or to deny them justice as a whole on account of the vagaries of some of their popular leaders.

From the time of our occupation of the island we have held out to them the hope of citizenship. The Foraker Act was declared to be a provisional and probationary measure. Had the great Senator who framed it and whose name it bears been permitted to have entirely his own way "the path of Porto Rican evolution would be smoother than it is." The time has come—indeed, it long since came—when the just demand of the Porto Ricans for citizenship in the great Republic of which they are now and must in all probability forever remain a part should be heeded by the American Congress. The Republican party is pledged to it, the honor of the Nation is pledged to it, and expediency as well as justice pleads for it.

At the same time I do not believe that the wisest or the best course is to confer citizenship in block upon the whole male population of Porto Rico. I believe that it will be wiser and more expedient to permit every elector of Porto Rico, upon his own motion and by his own act, to become a citizen of the United States.

Therefore it is that after a careful consideration, after consulting, both in person and by letter, with many whose opinions upon the subject I considered valuable, I introduced in this Congress a bill, to which I respectfully invite not only the attention of the Committee of the Whole House, but also of the Committee of the House on Insular Affairs, as a substitute for the bill from that committee now pending on the calendar; and this bill, which is brief, I now ask to have read at the Clerk's desk and to be inserted here as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 509) permitting citizens of Porto Rico, under certain conditions, to become citizens of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That any male person over the age of 21 years, actually resident in the island of Porto Rico, and an elector of Porto Rico under the laws thereof, may, upon his own motion, become a naturalized citizen of the United States by complying with the following forms and conditions:

First. He shall appear in person before the municipal judge of that municipality and judicial district within the island of Porto Rico wherein he may reside and file a declaration of his desire to become a citizen of the United States.

Second. Having filed such declaration, he shall, within not less than thirty and not more than sixty days thereafter, appear again in person before such municipal judge and take and subscribe an oath to support, maintain, and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States; whereupon a certificate of citizenship shall be issued to him by said municipal judge, and he shall thereupon become a citizen of the United States, and his name and residence shall be entered by said municipal judge upon a register to be kept by him for that purpose.

SEC. 2. That the municipal judge of each municipality shall provide and keep blanks for such declaration of a desire to become a citizen, of said oath of allegiance, and of said certificate of citizenship, which blank declaration shall contain spaces for the name, age, parentage, and residence of the applicant desiring to become a citizen, with his desire therein expressed, which blanks shall be in both the English and Spanish languages, and shall be filled up by said judge and read and carefully explained to the applicant before he signs the same; and upon the same being signed, it shall be filed by the said municipal judge.

SEC. 3. That for filing each declaration of a desire to become a citizen such municipal judge shall be paid by the applicant a fee of 25 cents; and for preparing and filing such oath of allegiance and issuing the said certificate the said judge shall be paid by the applicant a further fee of 25 cents.

SEC. 4. That after the 1st day of January, 1910, no person residing in Porto Rico and not a citizen of the United States may hold any office of honor or profit in any of the departments of public service in Porto Rico, whether executive, legislative, judicial, police, or whatsoever.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I submit that this bill has several important advantages over a bill granting citizenship indiscriminately to the Porto Rican electors.

In the first place, the bill puts it up to every elector of Porto Rico to become a citizen of the United States upon swearing allegiance to the country, to its laws, and to its Constitution, and this must of itself have some effect in the future upon those who thus voluntarily assume the obligations of citizenship. Then it will be noted that the bill itself, after a fixed date, which should now be extended, provides that no one not a citizen of the United States shall hold office in Porto Rico. In this way it provides, as I believe, for substantially quieting the malcontents who preach disloyalty, independence, or revolution. They must either go out of office or take an oath of allegiance to the Constitution and laws of the United States.

While I sincerely hope that this bill, or some such measure, will be speedily adopted by the Congress, I am not of the opinion that we should stop here.

I sincerely believe that the Porto Rican people are capable of a much greater measure of self-government than is conferred upon them by the present organic law governing that island. Their present parliament consists of two houses—an executive council and a house of delegates. The executive council consists of 11 members, all appointed by the President, 6 of whom, citizens of the United States, are all heads of departments, and the other 5 are citizens of Porto Rico, without portfolios. The house of delegates is elected by the people in the various districts into which the island is divided. I believe the time has come to increase the executive council to 13 and to permit a majority of it to be elected by the people of Porto Rico. This would leave the veto to the governor, the heads of departments for the present in the hands of Americans, but would give the control of both houses to the Porto Rican people.

So far I am convinced we can now go with entire safety. This much would at least show to the people of Porto Rico our disposition to advance them toward the goal, not of independence, but of self-government, toward which, however distant, their aspirations ardently lead them, and the ultimate grant of which not one of us can have the temerity to deny. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. BURTON] one hour.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Mr. Chairman, for more than a quarter of a century the question of a postal savings system has engaged the attention of this country. Believing in the wisdom of postal savings banks, I introduced, at the first session of this Congress, House bill 21263, which provides for the establishment of such a system. It is to this subject, and especially to the provisions of this bill, that I ask the attention of this Committee of the Whole for a brief period.

The importance of the measure under consideration will not be questioned by anyone. The money of a country is the life-blood of its trade and commerce, and determines, in a great measure, its financial and material condition. This, in turn, is a true index to the progress and development of a nation along economic, social, and moral lines. What, for instance, is more patent to the careful student of history than the fact that as peoples have developed and perfected their systems of finance they have also risen in the scale of social, intellectual, and moral well-being. That is to say that the two go hand in hand.

It is not intended to suggest that the development of a monetary system stands to these higher phases of life in the relation of cause to effect, or that the forces working for the improvement of financial conditions can in any sense be made a substitute for those higher moral and religious forces which make for the betterment of man and the upbuilding of a nation in all that is worthy and desirable. Far from it. The glory of a nation is its manhood, and its hope lies in those forces which build up and establish the highest and best type of manhood.

The suggestive fact remains, however, that a nation's material welfare keeps pace with its intellectual and moral growth, each reacting upon and promoting the other, and no nation has attained a high degree of civilization without developing a more or less elaborate and complex financial system. As a people ascends in the scale of social and civic life their needs and requirements become more numerous and complex, and their financial system must be correspondingly elaborated if they are to continue their progress and improvement along other lines.

Every nation of importance, either ancient or modern, has, sooner or later, developed commercial intercourse, not only among its own people, but with its neighboring peoples. The facility with which this intercourse can be carried on and the benefits to be derived therefrom are determined, in a large measure, by the character and condition of its financial system.

The most highly civilized nations have developed the most highly organized and elaborate systems of finance. This is essential to their material welfare; and if we, as a people, are to continue to ascend in the scale of life and approximate the glorious destiny which God has designed for us and placed within our reach, we must give careful consideration to, and make wise disposition of, this important question.

All careful students of our financial conditions are agreed that our system, if system it may be called, is defective in many respects, and should be speedily improved if we are to be saved from a recurrence of some of our sad and almost disgraceful experiences—item, the panic of 1907—or from possibly worse calamities, the very thought of which, if realized, must have a very detrimental effect upon our progress in every department of life.

Many thoughtful men have been searching for the remedy, and various plans have been suggested, and various expedients recommended. The painfully frequent and alarming upheavals which occur in our financial conditions are evidence that there is something radically wrong with the system, and the numerous bills now before Congress, proposing measures for relief, are evidence that very earnest and persistent efforts are being made to meet the conditions and solve the difficulties.

In the way, however, of every speedy action to accomplish the desired relief stands the fact that our financial interests are so great and far-reaching and in their ramifications touch in a vital way so many other interests, individual or corporate, that it is almost impossible to devise any plan that will command sufficient support and following to carry it into effect in the face of the opposition of various elements likely to be aroused.

Consequently the time is passing away without any action, and our financial interests are left meanwhile exposed to the possibility of panic, with all its attendant evils and distress. Certainly some action affording relief and protection should be taken, and that right speedily.

I therefore bring forward for your consideration a measure which, I believe, has in it the possibilities and the promise of the most speedy relief, together with the largest measure of permanent good.

It does not claim to be perfect; no such measure would stand any show of passage. It does not presume to offer a panacea for all the financial ills; no single measure could probably be devised to accomplish that. It does not propose any distinctive or radical scheme of finance.

It proposes a simple plan for a large measure of immediate relief which entails no large amount of expense, no elaborate and complicated machinery for putting it into effect, which does not antagonize any pet schemes, or any sensitive financial interests, and which, for these reasons, should be able to pass Congress promptly and be put at once into operation, which could be done in the course of a few weeks.

The bill which I propose merely provides for carrying into effect, in the simplest and most effective manner, the recommendations of the President and of the Postmaster-General regarding the establishment of a postal savings system.

A number of bills have been presented to the same purpose, and following the plan not to propose any strictly new or radical scheme of finance the bill which I propose has followed in the main—so far as its strictly financial features are concerned—the general plan of other bills proposed for the same purpose.

Its distinctive feature is that it proposes the use of the postal savings certificate in carrying into effect the provisions of the bill, instead of the savings pass book, as proposed in other bills. This furnishes a much simpler and more available method, and would result in great benefit to the Government, both in the ease and facility with which it could be put into operation and in the saving in expense of operation.

The idea of postal savings banks or depositories is not new. An active propaganda was begun in England a hundred years ago, and after fifty years of agitation the idea was enacted into law by act of Parliament, passed in 1861. Since that time postal savings banks have been in successful operation in England. As proof of their satisfactory results, no backward step has ever been taken in England, but in rapid succession her example has been followed by the most progressive nations, until at least 14 of the foremost have such a system in successful operation, leaving the United States almost alone among the commercial nations in the want of it.

It has been advocated by the ablest statesmen and financiers in this country, from Postmaster-General Creswell, in 1871, to the present time. Postmaster-General Meyer has been an active supporter of the plan, and presented a most convincing argument in its favor before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads during the last session of Congress. The report of that committee presents perhaps the strongest array of facts, figures, and arguments in favor of a postal savings system ever presented to a legislative body. No fair-minded person can read this report without being convinced, and I heartily commend it to your consideration.

The press is almost unanimous in favor of postal savings banks, and popular sentiment is overwhelming. Only from the savings banks is there heard a discordant note, and they appear to be laboring under a misapprehension. Unfortunately, their patriotism appears not to have arisen above their own selfish interests, and the term "savings bank" seems to suggest to them competition in their own field.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Certainly.

Mr. GILLESPIE. The gentleman states that the only opposition comes from savings banks. The national banks are opposing the system down in my district. Does not the gentleman have the same experience, that it is the national banks as well as the savings banks that are opposing it?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I will say to the gentleman that as far as my knowledge goes, I have heard no opposition from the national banks.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there not as much opposition from state banks? Does it not come from the bankers generally?

Mr. GILLESPIE. I have received no protest from state banks, but I have from national banks.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I never heard very much opposition from national banks, and very little, if any, from the state banks. That, however, might have escaped me, knowing that I was an advocate of it in a general way.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, my general information is that at the Denver convention the national bankers pronounced against postal savings banks, and are actively fighting it now. The bankers in my district have said nothing about it; but that is the fact, as I understand it.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I will say, so far as that is concerned, that that is no concern of ours. It is our duty to legislate for the people in order to do the greatest good to the greatest number. It is savers of small amounts that we are looking out for.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the reason why the national banks are opposed to it is because they say that the Government is behind the postal-savings system, and that the law makes a depositor absolutely safe, which argues, by implication, that they are not safe in the national banks, which we know is a fact.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I will say that the Government can well afford to be responsible for the money that it gets. It has control of it; it has control of the investment and knows where it is put.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The Government either ought to do that or make the national banks absolutely safe.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. By a little investigation they can easily verify the fact that in every country where a postal savings system is in operation it has proven advantageous to the other savings banks.

The postal savings banks are not designed to be, and are not, in fact, a substitute for other savings banks or their rival, but their feeder. They meet a need which the other savings banks could never meet and reach a class which they could never reach.

Many people are timid about attempting to do banking business. They are suspicious of the stability of the banks and unfamiliar with their methods. Again, a large class of people are not convenient to banks. The average distance from banks of the rural population in the South and West is many miles, and thus a large per cent of the population of the country is practically debarred from the privilege of banking.

As evidence that this fact materially affects the saving habits of the people, it is only necessary to observe that the average of the savings business runs much higher in New England, where savings banks are most numerous, than in the South and West. The savings banks do not reach the people. The post-office is near to all.

Moreover, the masses of the people have absolute confidence in the Government and would be glad to have it take care of their savings. They somehow feel that the post-office belongs to them. They have been brought up to deal with it from childhood and to look upon it as the people's institution. Many would therefore deal with the post-office and deposit their savings who would not deal with the banks. No such mystery surrounds the transaction of business with the post-office as, in the minds of many, surrounds the banking business.

Because of this feeling of awe of the banks, and the idea that there is some mystery about the business, and the fear that their money may not always be safe in the hands of a bank, the masses of the people do not do a banking business. The result is that their savings, amounting from a few dollars to some hundreds, and in some cases to thousands, and in the grand total of many millions, are hidden away in various odd corners and curious receptacles for safe-keeping, being withdrawn thereby from the channels of trade to the serious detriment of every financial interest.

I want to say that I have in mind an instance that occurred in my section. I walked into the Lewis National Bank one day, and the cashier held out to me a bunch of money, faded, compressed, looking old and worn, and I said, "Where did you get that bunch of money?" He said that a woman living out 3 or 4 miles in the country brought it in the other day. A few days before she had come in and said that she heard that we were paying interest on deposits the way savings banks paid it. She said she would bring in some money, and she brought in this bunch of money, amounting to about $475, and told the cashier that she had been walking over that money under the kitchen carpet for the last five years. Now, that money would have gone into the postal savings bank whenever she had accumulated five or ten dollars, and the commerce of the country would have had the benefit of it and she would have had the income from it.

The saver loses the income from his money, the banks are deprived of the profit that would accrue from its use, and trade suffers, because robbed of its lifeblood, resulting in periods of depression and financial unrest, often reaching the condition of panic.

From these considerations it appears certain that if the Government should furnish an attractive method for the accumulation and safe-keeping of these savings, it would not only result in bringing this money out of hiding and restoring it to the legitimate channels of trade, to the immediate and material benefit of a large class of people and of the commercial interests of the country generally, but would also furnish the solution to many of our financial problems and the remedy for many of our monetary ills.

No more important matter has demanded the attention of this body, and I solicit your very careful consideration of its details. As previously stated, the distinctive feature of this bill is its provision for the use of the postal savings certificate, and in this lies its superior merit. In other respects the bill follows the lines of other bills dealing with this subject, which have apparently received the most favorable consideration; and as these features are more or less familiar to you, I desire to call your attention especially to this simple, though unique, and ingenious device—the postal savings certificate—the ease with which it can be put into use by the Post-Office Department, and the beneficial results which would follow its use.

This device is the outgrowth, primarily, of the efforts of a practical banker to meet the needs and requirements of his own bank in the conduct of its daily business. He realized, with other bankers generally throughout the country, that there is a very real and pressing need for some provision to draw out and to put into circulation the vast sums hoarded and hidden away by the savers, as previously cited.

To accomplish this some inducement must be offered to them, and this has generally taken the form of the payment of interest on time deposits. The various plans and expedients which have been put into operation to that end have had a measure of success, to the extent that a large and distinctive branch of the banking business has been developed; but in their final working all of these various expedients have proved so troublesome and unsatisfactory that many banks have discarded their devices and abandoned the attempt.

The effort to meet the conditions has, however, resulted in the conception and development of a patented device, known as the "adjustable coupon certificate of deposit," which is claimed to furnish the solution of all these difficulties and to meet the needs and requirements of the case fully and exactly.

It furnishes a simple and adequate method of conducting the time-deposit business. It provides not only to the depositor a convenient and attractive means of accumulating savings and deriving an income therefrom in the meantime, but also proves a large saving to the bank in labor and expense. It secures the largest returns with the least outlay. Essentially, it is simply a certificate of deposit, which may be issued with the greatest ease and facility by any bank or financial institution to any customer for any amount, for any time, at any rate, and upon any terms and conditions that may be agreed upon. Its distinctive feature is that it has attached to it interest coupons, which are manufactured, as to value, at the moment of issue. The bank is enabled by this device to make the value of the coupons accord with the varying amounts of the deposits represented by the certificates to which the coupons are attached.

A study of the features and the possibilities of this device soon developed the fact that it might be employed for a wide range of uses. Indeed, it is available wherever an interest-bearing obligation can be employed.

The originator, as a test of its possibilities and of its adaptability to various uses and conditions, has applied it theoretically and practically to various financial propositions as they have been brought to his attention. In the pursuit of this plan, when the proposition of the Postmaster-General for the establishment of postal savings banks was made public, the principle of the device was applied to the plan, resulting in the postal savings certificate, which, I believe, solves the whole question, and furnishes a simple and available means of putting the plan into speedy operation, and thus of realizing the benefits which are certain to accrue.

As the details of the form of this device are treated somewhat exhaustively in the appendix which accompanies the bill, and with more accuracy and fullness than would be possible for me in the limited time at my disposal, I will ask permission to print the appendix as a portion of my speech in the RECORD without reading it at this time; and as a copy of this appendix will be supplied to each Member, I respectfully urge that you give it very careful study, and I assure you that it will well repay the trouble.

APPENDIX.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION OF POSTAL SAVINGS CERTIFICATE.

The device proposed to be used as an evidence of postal savings deposits and in lieu of the ordinary savings pass book, under the provisions of the foregoing bill, consists of five sheets of paper the size of a $1 bill, bound together at the left-hand end and perforated near the binding, so that they can be readily torn apart. The first two of these sheets are signature cards, or stubs, to be signed by the depositor, one being forwarded on the date of issue to the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, D. C., and the other being retained by the post-office issuing the postal savings certificate. The third and fourth sheets are interest coupons, numbered "1" and "2" and arranged in the order of their maturity, and the last is the certificate proper. The forms of these various sheets are shown below, and for convenience in reference are designated as follows:

Signature card to be sent to the Treasurer of the United States, designated as "a;" signature card to be retained by the post-office of issue, designated "b;" interest coupon No. 1, maturing six months after date, designated "c;" interest coupon No. 2, maturing twelve months after date, designated "d;" postal savings certificate proper, designated "e;" the back of signature cards (the same form appearing on the back of each), designated "f;" back of interest coupons (the same form appearing on the back of each), designated "g;" and back of certificate proper, designated "h."

SCHEDULES.

There are at the left-hand ends of both signature cards, of both interest coupons, and of the certificate proper, schedules of figures consisting of two vertical columns. The left-hand column runs from zero to nine, inclusive; the right-hand column from zero to ten, inclusive. These schedules are headed as follows: On the two signature cards and certificate proper, "Amount deposited;" on the two interest coupons, "Value of coupon." Above these vertical columns of figures are placed subheads, as follows: On the two signature cards and the certificate proper, the left-hand column is headed "Tens," and the right-hand column "Dollars," giving the schedule a maximum capacity of $100; on the two interest coupons, the left-hand column is headed "Dimes," and the right-hand column "Cents," giving these schedules a maximum capacity of $1. These schedules are employed to denote, on the two signature cards and certificate proper, the amount deposited, and on the two interest coupons the value of these interest coupons, or, in other words, the interest on the amount deposited for a certain specified time. The desired amounts are indicated in these schedules by punching out the proper figures. When the figures are punched the punch cuts entirely through the signature cards, the interest coupons, and the certificate proper, thus indicating by one process the proper amount on each one of these sheets.

By virtue of the different headings to these schedules the amount indicated by the figures in the schedules at the left-hand ends of the interest coupons is 1 per cent of the amount indicated by the corresponding figures in the schedules at the left-hand ends of the two signature cards and the certificate proper. Consequently each of the coupons represents 1 per cent of the amount deposited, as represented by the signature cards and the certificate proper. As the certificate bears interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, each coupon will represent the interest on the amount deposited for a period of six months, which is 1 per cent.

These schedules are superposed and made to register, so that when the amount deposited is punched in the schedule as it appears on the first signature card, by punching through the form this amount deposited is indicated on the two signature cards and the certificate proper, and the value of each interest coupon is indicated upon the coupon itself.

In the illustration given above, the figure "3" is punched in the "tens" column of the schedule on the face of the first signature card and the figure "7" in the "dollars" column, showing a value of $37. The thrust of the punch cuts through each sheet of the form and indicates on the two signature cards and the certificate proper that the amount deposited is $37. At the same time it punches on the interest coupons "3" in the "dimes" column and "7" in the "cents" column, indicating a value of 37 cents. Three dimes are 1 per cent of 3 tens of dollars; 7 cents are 1 per cent of $7, and 37 cents are 1 per cent of $37. Each coupon, therefore, represents 1 per cent interest on the amount deposited, which is the interest thereon for six months; and the two coupons represent the interest on the amount deposited for one year at 2 per cent.

Thus by a single stroke of the punch, the amount deposited is indicated on the two signature cards and the certificate proper, and the interest thereon is automatically calculated and its amount shown on the interest coupons. Error in interest calculation is rendered impossible.

Near the bottom of the two signature cards, the certificate proper, and the two interest coupons is a schedule of dates, so superposed as to register. These schedules on the two signature cards and the certificate proper are employed to denote the date of deposit and on the two interest coupons the due date, or date of maturity, of these interest coupons, respectively. The dates on the two interest coupons are so transposed that when the date of deposit is indicated in the schedule on the first signature cards, by punching through all the sheets of the form this date of deposit will be indicated on the two signature cards and the certificate proper and on the two interest coupons will be indicated their own due dates, respectively.

Thus in the illustration given, the date of deposit is indicated in the schedule on the face of the first signature card as December 7, 1908. The stroke of the punch cuts through all the sheets of the form and at the same time indicates on the two signature cards and the certificate proper this date of deposit, December 7, 1908; on the first interest coupon its due date, June 7, 1909; and on the second interest coupon its due date, December 7, 1909.

Both the schedules denoting amounts and the schedules denoting dates, which appear upon the faces of the various sheets of the form, are also placed in the reverse order on the backs of the sheets in such position that the schedules on the face and back of the several sheets register with each other, as follows:

"The schedules, which on the face of the two signature cards and the certificate proper denote the amount deposited and the date of deposit, are placed upon the backs of the two interest coupons; and the schedules, which on the face of the two interest coupons denote the value of these interest coupons and their due dates, respectively, are placed upon the backs of the two signature cards and the certificate proper."

This provides both a safeguard and additional information, with these results:

"When the amount deposited and the date of deposit are correctly punched in the schedules as they appear upon the face of the first signature card, by punching through all the sheets of the form, the amount deposited and the date of deposit are indicated on the faces of the two signature cards and of the certificate proper, and the value of each interest coupon and the respective due dates of these coupons are shown upon the faces of these coupons themselves. On the backs of the two signature cards and the certificate proper are shown the value of each interest coupon, and the due dates of these coupons, and on the backs of the coupons the amount deposited and the date of deposit.

"At the left-hand ends of the columns of figures as a precaution is printed the statement that the certificate is 'good only when one space is punched in each column.' Above the dating schedule on each sheet of the form is a statement of the particular date indicated in that schedule, and of the fact that the certificate is 'void if more than one date is punched.' Below the schedule on the first signature card are placed instructions for properly punching the date. Below the dating schedule on the second signature card are placed instructions for the signing of these signature cards. Below the dating schedule on the two interest coupons and the certificate proper are placed instructions for the collection of interest. On the signature cards, the interest coupons, and the certificate the serial number of the certificate appears. In the illustration shown the serial number is 72, so that the various parts of the device can be identified with reference to each other."

SIGNATURE CARDS "A" AND "B."

The signature cards recite that the certificate is issued by the post-office at Good Will, Va., for the amount punched in the left-hand margin, which amount can not exceed $100. It further recites that the certificate has attached to it two interest coupons maturing, respectively, at six and twelve months from the date of issue, each being for 1 per cent of the amount of the postal savings certificate. Below this is a receipt and place for signature to be signed by the depositor. This statement acknowledges the receipt, on the date punched on the signature cards, of the certificate described thereon, with two interest coupons attached, and directs that the certificate, if made payable "to order," must be indorsed according to the signature thereon. Below this is a blank space for the signature and address of the depositor.

The two signature cards, designated above as "a" and "b," are identical, except that at the top of "a" is a notice to the postmaster directing him to tear off "a" when the certificate is issued and forward it on that day to the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, D. C., and at the bottom are instructions for properly punching the date, while at the top of "b" is a notice to the postmaster directing him to tear off "b" and retain it, and at the bottom are instructions for the proper signing of the signature cards. Both of these signature cards are signed by the depositor with his name and address. There is, therefore, provided both at the United States Treasury, Washington, D. C., and at the post-office issuing the certificate, the signature of the depositor, so that if the certificate is made payable to the order of the depositor, both the post-office of issue and the United States Treasury, at Washington, D. C., have his signature, thereby enabling them to see that the indorsement on the back of the certificate is made by the proper party.

The signature cards bear the same serial number as the certificate proper, and afford an easy method of identifying the indorsement of the depositor. If the certificate is presented for redemption at the post-office of issue, the postmaster looks up signature card No. 72, and compares the signature on the card with the signature on the back of the certificate. If the certificate is presented for redemption at the United States Treasury, Washington, D. C., it is only necessary to look up Good Will, Va., No. 72, and compare the indorsement on the back of the certificate with the signature card No. 72. These two signature cards designated as "a" and "b" in the illustration above are detached before the postal savings certificate is delivered to the depositor.

INTEREST COUPONS "c" AND "d."

The interest coupons designated as "c" and "d" in the illustration above are practically duplicates, except as to number and date of maturity. When the postal savings certificate to which they are attached is properly issued, they will each represent the interest on the amount of value of the certificate for six months, which is 1 per cent of the value of said certificate. They have at their left-hand ends schedules similar to the schedules at the left-hand ends of the two signature cards and the certificate proper, and registering therewith, but so headed that the figures in these schedules represent 1 per cent of the amount indicated by the corresponding figures in the schedules at the left-hand ends of the signature cards and the certificate proper.

The interest coupons have near the bottom a dating schedule similar to the schedules placed upon the signature cards and the certificate proper, and made to register therewith, but so arranged as to indicate the date of maturity or due date of the interest coupons, respectively. The interest coupon No. 1 matures six months from the date of issue, and coupon No. 2 matures twelve months from date of issue. Both coupons state that they are detached from 2 per cent postal savings certificate, and the serial number 72 appears on each.

The coupons recite that the United States of America will pay to bearer on the date punched near the bottom of the coupon, which is six months (or twelve months) after date of issue of the certificate from which they are detached, at the United States Treasury, Washington, D. C., or at any money-order post-office of the United States, the amount punched in the left-hand margin of the coupon, being interest on its 2 per cent postal savings certificate, issued for the amount punched on the back of the coupon, and bearing the serial number 72.

The signature of the Treasurer of the United States is presumed to be engraved on these coupons in the space indicated for that purpose.

Above the dating schedule is the statement, "Due date of this interest coupon is punched here. Void if more than one date is punched." Below the dating schedule is the instruction, "To collect interest tear off the top coupon when it falls due."

As the maximum value of the certificate is $100 and the maximum value of the coupon is 1 per cent of $100, it follows that the maximum value of the coupon is $1, and as an additional safeguard there appear on the face of each coupon the words, "Not good for more than $1."

The coupons are made payable to bearer. They therefore require no indorsement, and no coupon can exceed $1 in value. As they require no indorsement or identification, they are made payable either at the Treasury of the United States at Washington, D. C., or at any money-order post-office. In this particular the difference between the coupons and the certificate is that the certificate can be registered as payable to a named party, in which case it requires the indorsement of that party. The signature of the depositor is furnished on the signature card, both to the post-office of issue and to the United States Treasury at Washington, D. C. Consequently, the certificate is made payable only at the post-office of issue or at the United States Treasury at Washington, where the signature can be identified. The coupons, being payable to bearer, require no such provision and are therefore payable at any money-order post-office. The coupons being necessarily for small amounts, there is no danger of embarrassment to the money-order post-office by a call for this money.

POSTAL SAVINGS CERTIFICATE "e."

The depositor then receives the postal savings certificate No. 72, and designated as "e" in the illustration above, with two interest coupons attached, designated as "c" and "d" in the illustration above. This postal savings certificate bears at its left-hand end the schedule of figures denoting amounts, and near the bottom the dating schedule, as heretofore described.

The certificate is identified by the statement at the top, designating it as 2 per cent postal savings certificate No. 72, issued for not more than $100 and for not longer than one year, payable at or after the expiration of one year from the date of issue, at which time it will cease to bear interest. It also states that "the title to this certificate will pass by delivery, if made payable to bearer," the object of this being to notify the depositor that unless the certificate is registered as payable to him, it will pass by delivery like ordinary currency.

The face of the certificate certifies that there has been deposited with the United States Government, at its post-office in Good Will, Va., the amount punched in the left-hand margin of the certificate, namely, $37. It further states that this amount, $37, will be paid to the depositor (a blank space being left for the insertion of the name of the depositor) or order, on or after the expiration of one year from the date punched on the certificate, upon the surrender of the certificate properly indorsed. The certificate states that it is payable at the United States Treasury, Washington, D. C., or at the post-office of issue. It can readily be paid at either of these places, as the United States Treasury, at Washington, D. C., and the post-office of issue have each retained a signature card enabling them to identify the indorsement, should the certificate be payable to a named party.

The certificate further recites that it bears interest at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, at six and twelve months from the date of issue of the same, on the presentation and surrender of the interest coupons attached to the certificates when respectively due. It also calls attention to the fact that the date on which the interest coupons become due is punched on these interest coupons themselves. The signature of the Treasurer of the United States is presumed to be engraved on this certificate, but the certificate is not valid until countersigned by the postmaster at Good Will, Va., and a space for his countersignature is provided at the lower left-hand portion of the certificate.

The certificate also instructs the depositor how to collect his interest, namely, "To collect interest, tear off top coupon sheet when it falls due," the top coupon sheet being the first maturing coupon, as above described. The certificate contains a safeguard in that it has printed on its face the words, "Issued for not more than $100 and for not longer than one year," indicating that the maximum value of the certificate can never exceed $100 (that being the maximum value that can be punched in the columns of figures at the left-hand end), and indicating further that the certificate matures at the end of one year and does not bear interest after that time.

It might be advisable to provide that the certificate can be cashed at any time. This can be done by adding to one of the paragraphs on the face of the certificate so that it will read as follows: "This amount will be paid to ——— ——— or order, on or after the expiration of one year from the date punched hereon, upon the surrender of this certificate properly indorsed, or it will be paid on demand at any time, upon the surrender of the certificate properly indorsed, together with all unmatured interest coupons."

BACK OF SIGNATURE CARDS.

The backs of the signature cards, designated as "f" in the illustration given above, are duplicates and are identical with the schedules appearing on the face of the interest coupons, except that on the backs of the signature cards these schedules are arranged in the reverse order, so as to register with the schedules on the face of the signature cards. When the amount deposited and the date of deposit are punched on the face of these signature cards, the same process will indicate in the schedules on the backs of these cards the value of each interest coupon and the date of maturity of the first interest coupon.

BACK OF INTEREST COUPONS.

The backs of the two interest coupons, designated "g" in the illustration given above, are identical. They bear the same schedules as are found on the face of the two signature cards and certificate proper, except that they are reversed so as to register with the schedules on the face of these interest coupons. When the value of each interest coupon and its date of maturity are punched on the face of the interest coupon, the schedules on the back will indicate the amount deposited and the date of deposit.

The backs of the interest coupons also bear the following explanation and instructions: That the title to the coupon will pass by delivery; that the face of the coupon will be paid at maturity or at any time thereafter; that the face value and date of maturity are punched on the other side (face) of the coupon; as a safeguard, that no coupon will be paid which is punched for more than 1 per cent of the face value of the postal savings certificate from which it was detached; and that the face value of the certificate is shown by the schedule on the back of the interest coupon.

BACK OF CERTIFICATE.

The back of the certificate proper, designated as "h" in the illustration given above, bears the same schedules as are found on the face of the interest coupons, except that they are arranged in the reverse order, so as to register with the schedules on the face of the certificate. When the amount deposited and the date of deposit are punched on the face of the certificate, the same process indicates in the schedules on the back of the certificate the value of each interest coupon and the due date of the last interest coupon.

Any other matter of explanation or instruction deemed desirable may be placed upon the backs of the two signature cards and certificate proper, which, in the illustration given above, are left blank, except as heretofore described.

In all cases the schedules denoting amounts described herein as being placed across the left-hand end of the various sheets of the forms may be enlarged and placed horizontally across the face of the sheets above the dating schedules. In that case the schedule is used as a background and the other matter printed over it. This gives more space, both for schedules and for the other matter, and by a proper contrast in the ink both can be made perfectly plain. This form does not in any manner affect the principle or application of the device, and the explanations given are equally applicable to this form.

ELASTICITY.

The device is absolutely elastic, and a certificate with interest coupons attached can be issued for $1 or for $100, or for any intermediate amount, with equal ease. As an illustration, suppose that it be desirable to issue a certificate for $7. In that case, the figure "0" would be punched in the "tens" column, and the figure "7" in the "dollars" column, in the schedule at the left-hand end of the form, indicating that the value of the certificate is no "tens" and 7 "dollars." When this amount is punched in the schedule as it appears on the face of the first signature card, by punching through all the sheets of the form the punch cuts through the interest coupons, indicating on them their own value, which is the interest at 1 per cent on the amount deposited. In the illustration before us this process will indicate on the two signature cards and the certificate proper that the value of the certificate is no "tens" and 7 "dollars." At the same time it will indicate on each interest coupon that its value is no "dimes" and 7 "cents." It will be observed that the 7 cents is 1 per cent of $7. The calculation of interest is therefore absolutely automatic, and requires no thought or attention. When the proper figures are punched to denote the amount deposited, or value of the certificate, the same punch automatically calculates the interest, and indicates on the face of each interest coupon its own value.

FLEXIBILITY.

The flexibility of the device can be seen by noting that if it were deemed advisable to make the maximum value of the certificate $1,000 instead of $100, this could be accomplished by adding another vertical column of figures to the left-hand side of the schedules, which additional column on the signature cards and the certificate would be headed with the word "hundreds," and on the interest coupons with the word "dollars," so that the three columns of figures at the left-hand ends of the signature cards and the certificate would be headed "hundreds," "tens," and "dollars," and on the interest coupons the corresponding columns would be headed "dollars," "dimes," and "cents." In this case the maximum value of the certificate would be $1,000, and the maximum value of the interest coupons would be 1 per cent of $1,000, or $10.

This would also necessitate a change in the statement on the face of the signature cards and the certificate, "Issued for not more than $100," to "Issued for not more than $1,000," and on the interest coupons it would require a change of the statement, "Not good for more than $1," to "Not good for more than $10." Moreover, if the Government preferred to use these postal savings certificates with coupons for more than one year, this could easily be done by simply adding additional coupons, and the number of coupons attached to the postal savings certificate could be increased to cover any number of years. This will not in any way conflict with the essential principle of the device nor affect its simplicity. The same thrust of the punch which indicates the face value of the certificate and of the coupons in the illustration given above would in like manner indicate the face value of the certificate, and the value of the coupons, even if coupons for any number of years were attached to the certificate. The vertical columns of figures being so superposed as to register, the punch would cut through all the coupons at the same stroke.

It is therefore evident that the details of this device can be modified in almost any respect to suit the requirements of the situation, as the same may become apparent, without in any manner affecting its availability for use. The essential of the device consists in the schedules of figures indicating, respectively, the value of the certificate and the value of the coupons, and providing, on account of our decimal system of money, an absolutely automatic calculation of interest.

SIMPLICITY.

The absolute simplicity of this postal savings certificate constitutes one of the strongest arguments for its use. Upon its adoption it could be at once placed in operation in every post-office. The details of its use are so simple that a child could issue the certificate and calculate the interest. The only preparation needed would be to furnish each post-office of issue with the necessary forms of certificate and a simple hand punch. To issue a postal savings certificate requires only the following steps:

"1. Have the depositor write his name and address on both signature cards.

"2. Punch through all the sheets at the left-hand end one figure in each column to indicate the amount of deposit.

"3. Punch through all the sheets in the dating schedule at the bottom the date of deposit.

"4. On the certificate proper fill out the name of the depositor, and have the postmaster countersign.

"5. Detach the two signature cards and deliver the certificate with the two interest coupons to the depositor.

"6. Mail signature card No. 1 to the department in Washington; file signature card No. 2 for future reference."

These simple steps require no special knowledge or ability. A man of less than average intelligence could carry out the instructions. There is no calculation of interest, and no opportunity for mistake. As between the postmaster and the department, in handling these postal savings certificates there is a simple and absolute check. The department sends to the postmaster at Good Will, Va., 1,000 forms of postal savings certificates, numbered from 1 to 1000, inclusive, and takes his receipt therefor. The signature cards sent in each day keep the department fully informed from day to day as to the business done. When the post-office inspector comes to Good Will he is informed that at the close of business on the preceding day, say, 513 postal savings certificates have been issued out of the 1,000 forms received by the postmaster. This would leave 487 forms in the postmaster's hands. The inspector counts them, and if he finds only 486 the postmaster is immediately required to deposit with the department $100 (maximum value of the certificate) plus twice $1 (maximum value of the coupons), or a total of $102, thereby absolutely protecting the Government. Should a postal savings certificate be mutilated in issuing, then this mutilated certificate could be returned as a voucher to the department and the postmaster receive proper credit therefor.

DISTINCTIVE FEATURES.

The foregoing bill, providing for the use of this device by postal savings depositories, corresponds in the main with other bills presented for the same purpose. The essential difference is that the foregoing bill provides for the use of the postal savings certificate as an evidence of deposit in the place of the savings pass book provided for in other bills.

COMPARISON BETWEEN THE SAVINGS PASS BOOK AND THE POSTAL SAVINGS CERTIFICATE.

The savings pass book is open to the following objections:

"(a) The depositor placing his savings with the post-office receives as an evidence of his deposit a small pass book. This pass book is not transferable, and is not available for use in any way, except that the depositor can bring his pass book back to the post-office of issue, and upon doing this can withdraw all or a part of his funds. If it is inconvenient to go to the post-office of issue, then the depositor has no means of obtaining any portion of his deposit. The pass book not being transferable must necessarily be deposited by him in some place for safe-keeping, and will frequently be lost or mislaid, thereby occasioning great trouble to the department and to the depositor to have it reissued so as to enable him to withdraw his money."

Moreover, under the savings pass-book plan, there is no method provided by which the depositor can withdraw his interest as such at stated periods. The interest under the savings pass-book system is calculated at certain times upon the delivery of the pass book to the department, and is then credited on the pass book, which is thereupon returned to the depositor. There is no piece of paper or obligation of any kind representing the interest as distinguished from the principal, and enabling the depositor to withdraw the interest at stated periods.

Moreover, during the period when the pass book is in the hands of the department for the purpose of computing and crediting the interest, the depositor has nothing to represent his account, and is in the meantime debarred both from depositing or withdrawing money.

"(b) Under the pass-book system, and under the bills providing for its use, the books must be turned in at stated intervals, say, twice a year, so that the interest can be calculated. If there were outstanding a million pass books, it would be almost impossible to have all of these pass books turned in to the department for the purpose of computing and crediting the interest. Should the number equal the number outstanding in Great Britain in 1904, which was approximately 10,000,000, the task would be quite impossible. Should even a large part of them be turned in, the labor devolving upon the department in calculating the interest on this number of separate accounts would be enormous; it would necessarily result in errors, and would prove a cumbersome machinery both to the Government and to the depositor. The cost involved would also be a serious item, at the lowest estimate running into millions.

"(c) Under the pass-book system the depositor only draws interest from and after certain specified times. He does not draw interest from the date of deposit, and is therefore deprived of interest for the use of his money for a portion of the time that the money is deposited with the Government. This also involves the Government in a great deal of unnecessary labor to compute the interest for the proper time. It also increases the liability to error and the opportunity for fraud."

THE POSTAL SAVINGS CERTIFICATE.

The postal savings certificate offers the following advantages over the savings pass book:

"(a) The certificate is issued at the time of deposit, with interest coupons attached representing interest on the deposit from the time that the money is placed with the Government; that is to say, the certificate bears interest from the date of deposit.

"The depositor receiving a postal savings certificate need not come to the post-office of issue to collect his interest, because he can detach his interest coupon when the same matures and collect it at any money-order post-office, or he can deposit it for collection with any bank or country store. He can collect his certificate in the same way by simply indorsing it. He therefore does not have to go to the post-office of issue to collect either his interest or principal, as he has to do in the case of the savings pass book.

"Moreover, the savings pass book is of no value except to enable the owner to withdraw his money from the post-office where it is deposited, while the postal savings certificate is, in substance, a coupon bond or obligation, registered as to principal, with coupons payable to bearer. The depositor can use his postal savings certificate in all the ways in which he can use an ordinary coupon bond or obligation. He can detach his coupons when due and collect his interest or he can use both coupons and certificate in any way in which any other security could be used. He can transfer his certificate with the coupons to any other party by simply indorsing the certificate, whereas under the savings pass-book plan he can not transfer it except by withdrawing the deposit and having another party redeposit it.

"(b) With the postal savings certificate the interest is automatically calculated for the life of the certificate at the time of issue. With the savings pass book the pass books must be turned in to the department at stated times, and each account requires an interest calculation and a credit of the accrued interest to the depositor on the pass books, and also on the books of the department. Under the postal savings certificate plan, the automatic calculation of interest is complete when the figures denoting the amount deposited are properly punched in the schedule as it appears on the face of the first signature card, the punch at the same time cutting through all the sheets of the form. There is never any other calculation of interest. There is no necessity for returning the postal savings certificate to the department in order to have the interest calculated. The interest is calculated at the beginning for the life of the certificate, and the life of the certificate can be made as long as desired by simply adding two additional coupons for each year of additional life. The labor involved in the illustration given above, to calculate interest on a million or ten million pass books assumed to be turned in, is entirely eliminated by the use of a postal savings certificate, because of the fact that with the postal savings certificate this calculation is made at the time of issue, and is made automatically. The liability to error and mistake necessarily incident to a large number of calculations of interest is absolutely done away with. The loss on account of errors in interest calculations and the enormous amount of work incident to such calculations would probably constitute the largest portion of the cost to the Government in the use of the savings pass book. By eliminating those two items of cost, the employment of the postal savings certificate in the conduct of a postal savings bank system would probably save the Government over any other plan proposed more than the entire cost of the operation of such a system under this plan.

"(c) With the postal savings certificate the depositor draws interest from the date of deposit, this being payable in equal installments at six and twelve months after the date of deposit. The Government, upon paying this interest, has a voucher for every interest payment. The interest is paid only upon the presentation of the voucher. The depositor must present his interest coupon to collect his interest, and the Government pays the interest to the party who holds the coupon, thereby obviating all questions as to what amount of interest is due and to whom it is payable. No error in interest calculation can occur, for the reasons stated above. The interest coupon itself contains safeguards which prevent the Government from paying out any improper amount of interest. It provides the Government with a voucher for each payment, and prevents the postmaster, or any employee of the Government, by collusion with other employees, from paying out an improper amount of interest.

"(d) With the savings pass book as an evidence of indebtedness, the Government, in attempting at any time to ascertain the interest due depositors, would have to call in the pass books from all depositors and then calculate the interest accrued on the account of each depositor as of the date when the statement was desired. This would be practically impossible, and consequently the Government would never be able to determine accurately its liabilities under the savings pass-book system. With the postal savings certificate the amount of interest for which the Government is liable will be evidenced by the interest coupons, and the value of these coupons would be absolutely known, thereby enabling the Government to obtain at any time an accurate statement of its liability without extra labor."

THE POSTAL SAVINGS CERTIFICATE AS AN EMERGENCY CURRENCY.

It has been demonstrated in recent months that in times of stress the general public are disposed to withdraw their deposits from the national and state banks and hide the money away in various places, thereby withdrawing it from circulation. On the other hand, it has been demonstrated that the general public, in the effort to find a safe depository for their funds, naturally look to the Government. This has been evidenced particularly by the fact that during the period of greatest financial stress a great many people took out post-office money orders, payable to themselves, simply using post-offices as depositories, so as to feel assured that they could get their money upon demand. The Post-Office Department in this case paid no interest, and the object of the public was simply to secure a safe depository for their funds.

In consequence it is reasonable to assume that in times of financial stress the public will always be tempted to withhold its funds from national and state banks and to look for some depository of unquestioned financial strength and safety. Naturally these deposits will be made with the Government, through its Post-Office Department, if the Government is receiving such deposits.

In the several bills recently presented to Congress the postal savings idea is evidently intended to be a means of preventing a recurrence of financial conditions such as existed during the latter part of the year 1907. In these bills it is provided that where money is deposited with a post-office, that post-office shall redeposit these funds with the national banks in the community or section where the post-office is located, thereby restoring this currency to circulation. In this way the party withdrawing $37 from the bank in times of stress and depositing this money with the post-office and receiving therefor a savings pass book would really not have withdrawn his money from circulation, because the post-office would redeposit the money with the banks from which it was withdrawn, thus restoring the money to circulation. The banks would secure these deposits to the Government as they secure other Government deposits, and would pay for the use of the same a stipulated rate of interest.

It appears from this that with the use of the savings pass book in the conduct of a postal-savings system the money withdrawn from circulation by the people and deposited with the post-office would be returned to circulation.

With the postal-savings certificate this same result is accomplished, and in addition an extraordinary currency is created somewhat similar to clearing-house certificates which have been successfully used in every time of financial stress in recent years; but having this important difference, that whereas the clearing-house certificates are an emergency currency based on the credit of an association of banks, the postal-savings certificate would constitute an emergency currency based on the credit of the Government itself.

ILLUSTRATIONS.

We will assume that in a time of financial stress similar to that which existed in the latter months of 1907, John Doe withdraws $37 from the Good Will National Bank, of Good Will, Va. He takes this $37 to the post-office at Good Will, and the postmaster issues to him postal-savings certificate No. 72, with two interest coupons for $0.37 each, maturing, respectively, at six and twelve months after date of issue of the certificate, as shown in the illustration above.

John Doe has withdrawn from the bank $37, and has deposited it with the post-office. The post-office at Good Will immediately redeposits this $37 with the Good Will National Bank from which it was withdrawn by John Doe, thereby restoring the $37 to circulation. In addition, John Doe has in his possession as an evidence of his deposit of this $37 with the Government, a postal savings certificate, No. 72, for $37, payable one year after date of issue, if in accordance with the preceding forms; or payable on demand, if the suggestion following the description of the forms providing for the payment of the certificate upon its delivery with all unmatured coupons, were followed. In addition to this certificate for $37, he has two coupons each for $0.37, maturing, respectively, at six and twelve months. He goes to the merchant with whom he trades in Good Will, and to whom he owes $25. He states that he can not pay the $25 in money, but that he has a postal savings certificate for $37, and will pay his bill of $25 with this certificate, provided the merchant will return him the difference, namely, $12. There being absolutely no question about the ultimate redemption of the certificate, and the times being times of great financial stress, when clearing-house certificates are ordinarily in current use, and when the stores and great business houses are advertising that they are willing to accept clearing-house certificates in payment of purchases, there could scarcely be a question but that the merchant in Good Will would accept this postal savings certificate in settlement of his $25 debt, handing over to John Doe the difference between the debt and the face of the certificate.

John Doe would previously have detached the two coupons for $0.37 each, maturing, respectively, at six and twelve months, and with these he would likewise pay small debts, or would use them as fractional currency.

The ultimate result of this would be that, while John Doe had withdrawn $37 from the bank, placing it in the post-office, the post-office would have restored this $37 to circulation by redepositing it with the bank. John Doe would also have put into circulation $37 plus twice $0.37 of emergency currency. He would have done this by using this postal savings certificate and coupons separately. In consequence, his withdrawal of $37 from the bank would have resulted in the restoration of this $37 to circulation, and in the creation of 102 per cent of $37 in emergency currency, which would pass current, and be used in business, while the strained financial conditions continued. John Doe would therefore have increased the currency by 102 per cent of emergency currency, instead of decreasing it, as is now the case. Having increased the currency, he would necessarily have helped to overcome the financial stress.

To follow this to its conclusions, assume that in a time of financial stress $100,000,000 was withdrawn from the banks and placed with the Post-Office Department in exchange for postal savings certificates. This $100,000,000 would be immediately returned to circulation by reason of the fact that the Post-Office Department would redeposit the money with the banks. In addition the Post-Office Department would have issued $102,000,000 of emergency currency. Of this $102,000,000 of government obligations, $100,000,000 would be represented by postal savings certificates, none of which would exceed $100 in value, and $2,000,000 would be represented by interest coupons, none of which would exceed $1 in value, thereby increasing the fractional currency. The very fact that the circulation was increased by this emergency currency would serve to render impossible a continuation of strained financial conditions.

In the absence of any postal savings system, as is at present the condition, this money withdrawn from the banks in times of financial stress and because of the timidity of depositors, would be hidden away. It would thus be withdrawn from circulation, which fact would tend to greatly aggravate the already strained conditions.

With a postal savings system, employing the savings pass book as an evidence of deposit, this condition would be in a measure overcome by the fact that the money thus withdrawn from the banks would to a great extent be deposited with the post-offices, and by them redeposited with the banks, and thus returned to circulation.

With a postal savings system, employing the postal savings certificate as an evidence of deposit, this advantage would be greatly enhanced by the fact that this money withdrawn from the banks under panic conditions would be placed with the post-office, and by the post-office redeposited with the bank, and thus returned to circulation; and, at the same time, an emergency currency to the amount of 102 per cent of the sums thus deposited with the post-office would be issued by the post-office in the form of certificates and interest coupons, thereby practically doubling the circulation, instead of reducing it as at present. When the financial stress was over, these certificates and coupons would no longer be received as currency, the necessity therefor having passed, and they would, from time to time, be redeemed as they matured. The banks would probably accept both certificates and coupons as cash and would redeem them at the post-office. The post-office would pay these postal savings certificates and coupons by checks drawn on the banks presenting them, thereby retiring the emergency currency and preventing money from becoming too plentiful.

In all cases the Government would be absolutely protected, because it would pay principal and interest only upon the presentation of certificates and coupons. It would be immaterial to the Government as to who held the certificates and coupons, because they would be payable in any case at certain specified times.

Further, in order to relieve or prevent panic conditions, whether they be the cause or effect of a scarcity of currency, it might be provided that the national-bank depositories of the postal funds under this act be permitted themselves to buy the postal-savings certificates, or, in other words, the Government's bonds issued by the post-office, and to employ these bonds as a basis for their own circulation. For this purpose a special issue of certificates of larger denominations might be provided. This would be perfectly feasible and might be accomplished without any additional machinery and with little expense or delay. The plan would be in perfect harmony with the methods at present in use of employing Government bonds as a basis for national-bank circulation. For example, in a time of financial stress or a great scarcity of circulating medium, suppose the national bank of Goodwill, W. Va., should deposit $100,000 with the post-office at Goodwill, and receive therefor postal-savings certificates, or, in other words, Government bonds for like amount. This money deposited with the post-office, under the plan proposed, would be redeposited with the National Bank of Goodwill. At the same time the bank might deposit this $100,000 of postal certificates with the Government and have issued therefor $100,000 of its own circulation.

By this means it can readily be seen that the circulating medium could be practically doubled in a very brief time. This without any additional machinery or without doing violence to any of the plans or methods ordinarily employed by the Government. The large addition to the circulating medium accomplished thereby would certainly and speedily put a stop to, or prevent, any financial panic. After the panic conditions had passed this extraordinary currency would speedily be retired. Should the banks be dilatory in retiring this extraordinary circulation, the process could easily be hastened by raising the rate of interest to be paid by the banks on government deposits. Should they hesitate or delay to take out circulation under this plan, the process might be hastened by reducing, or, if necessary, removing entirely the interest charges on account of government deposits in national banks. Thus, by the simple process of raising or lowering the rate of interest to be paid by the national banks on government deposits, the volume of circulation could be increased or diminished at will. In other words, it would create an automatically elastic currency, expanding and contracting with the country's needs and requirements. This simple plan would furnish the solution of our most troublesome financial problems.

THE SAVING TO THE GOVERNMENT BY USING THE POSTAL SAVINGS CERTIFICATE.

The Government, receiving the money on deposit with the post-office and paying 2 per cent therefor, would redeposit this money with the banks, receiving therefor a minimum of 2½ per cent on such deposits. In times of stress the banks would be only too glad to pay this or even a higher rate for money. The Government would in consequence be receiving a least 2½ per cent on the entire amount deposited with it.

A great number of the postal savings certificates and of the coupons would be lost or destroyed and would never come in for redemption. In addition, neither the coupons nor the certificates would bear interest after their due dates. Many of them, after their due dates, would not be presented for redemption for a long period of time, because these certificates and coupons, having become demand obligations of the Government, would be like ordinary paper currency; and, because of the fact that the money could be obtained by them on demand, they would not be presented, but would stay out until they came into the hands of the Government through regular channels. In consequence, while the Government would be receiving 2½ per cent on the entire amount of deposits for the entire time, it would be paying to the public only 2 per cent on a part of the deposits for a part of the time. Of course, if the Government received more than 2½ per cent, or if it invested any of this money in securities bearing a higher rate, there would be so much additional revenue to the Government from this source.

In addition, the saving in the expense of operation in the use of the postal savings certificate over any other plan would be very great; the supplies required would be few and inexpensive; no individual bookkeeping would be necessary; no calculations of interest; no training or experience on the part of the postmasters; and no army of clerks required by the Government for the keeping of records and the calculation of interest; error and fraud would be practically eliminated. The Government would be absolutely protected at every point, and all the benefits of a postal savings system secured without its objectionable features.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Right there I would like to ask the gentleman if in his bill he exempts the deposits from attachment execution or process of the court?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. The provision in all the bills makes the money loaned to the bank by the Government a first lien on all the assets of the bank. That applies only to national banks. I see no reason why state banks or savings banks that would be willing to submit to an examination by the Government experts, so that their condition might be ascertained, might not be allowed the benefit of the same privilege.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I think the gentleman misapprehends my question. I want to know if his bill provides that when the depositor puts his money in these postal banks that it shall be exempt from execution or attachment by creditors?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. No; there is no such provision as that; but, as I understand, all such funds are exempt by law. I do not know, but perhaps the gentleman does. He is a lawyer.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is one of the complaints against some of the bills, and I believe possibly on Mr. Meyer's recommendation, that a man may take his money and put it in one of these banks, and then his creditors can not get it out by any kind of court process.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. It has been some time since I read those bills.

As we study the characteristics of this simple device, a broad field of possibilities opens before us. So varied and interesting are its applications that we deem it a matter of the greatest concern; that, in advocating its adoption for this specific purpose, we avail ourselves of all the light possible upon the subject. The purpose for which its use is recommended has in it the possibilities of the most important and far-reaching results—results that may affect for weal our whole financial structure and the welfare of the generations to come. For a better understanding, therefore, of this subject, we may look more carefully into the history of this device and the results of its present use.

I have before called your attention to the fact that the principle employed in this device is the discovery of a practical banker. In the ordinary conduct of his business, and after much study and experiment, he brought out and put into practical use the essential principle of the device now proposed for use in this connection. This was accomplished in the effort to provide a means whereby the banks could accomplish, in a measure, what the Government has in view in advocating the establishment of postal savings depositories, namely, to draw out of hiding and put into the channels of trade the savings of the people, and also to encourage the people in habits of saving and thrift. It will therefore be seen that its use involves no conflict between the Government and the banking interests, both working for the same end by the same means.

As applied to banking, this device takes a slightly different form, but does not differ in principle. In mechanical features, it consists of a stub or signature card, the certificate proper, and a number of interest coupons, which number is determined by the rate of interest paid and the number of years for which the certificate is issued. There are as many coupons for each year as there are units or fractions thereof in the rate of interest. For example, a 3 per cent certificate has three coupons per year, each being for 1 per cent of the principal, and the total number of coupons will be the product of the numbers denoting the rate and the time.

Lastly, there is attached what is called the "pink sheet," which describes the terms and conditions on which the use of this device may be had.

The various sheets in this banking form are similar to the sheets in the postal savings certificate and are collated in the same manner. They are bound together at the left-hand end and have similar schedules of figures at the left-hand end, so superposed that they register, by means of which the amount or value of the certificate may be indicated on the signature card, pink sheet, and certificate proper, and the value of each interest check may be indicated on the interest check itself by a single stroke of the punch cutting through the same figures on each sheet.

The date of deposit may also be indicated on the signature card, pink sheet, and certificate proper, and the due date of each interest check may at the same time be indicated on each interest check itself by one and the same stroke of the punch cutting through all the sheets of the form in the dating schedule near the bottom of the sheets.

Thus is the calculation of the interest made perfectly automatic for the life of the certificate. The issuing of these certificates is made so simple that even a child can do it after being once shown. It consists only of the following steps:

Have the depositor write his name and address on the signature card; punch through the schedules at the left-hand end of the sheets the figures denoting the amount for which the certificate is to be issued, as indicated by the schedule on the the face of the signature card. Because of the arrangement of the schedules on the several sheets, and the fact that they are so superposed as to register, this will indicate on the signature card, pink sheet, and certificate proper the amount deposited, or, in other words, the value of the certificate, and it will at the same time and by the same stroke of the punch indicate on each interest check its own value. This value of each interest check will be 1 per cent of the amount deposited, and will represent the correct interest on that amount for a specified time. This makes the calculation of interest absolutely automatic, and error in that respect impossible.

Punch through the schedules at the bottom of the sheets the date of deposit, according to the form on the face of the signature card. This will show on the signature card, pink sheet, and certificate proper the date of deposit, and on each interest check its own proper due date or date of maturity.

Fill out the certificate proper by writing in ink the depositor's name and the amount deposited, both in figures and in words.

Tear off the signature card and the "pink sheet" to be retained by the bank, and deliver the certificate thus completed, with the interest calculated for the life of the certificate, to the depositor.

What is the result? The bank has put into the hands of the depositor a coupon bond, registered as to principal, but which may pass freely by indorsement, thus giving it the largest possible field of usefulness, and as to interest coupons, perfectly negotiable.

This has proved in practice a great attraction, greatly facilitating matters and relieving the depositor of many troublesome and annoying details. Incidentally, it increases the income from his money, shows him exactly what his interest will be and when due, and enables him to collect the same without even the trouble of going to the bank, if he so desires.

Because of these advantages, many are induced to deposit their money who would not otherwise do so, thus fulfilling the purpose for which the plan was designed, and others are constrained to continue their deposit who might otherwise withdraw it.

As to the bank, where it is in use, it has given the greatest satisfaction. It enables them to build up their time deposits, by furnishing inducements to depositors. It solves banking by mail. It makes the work of issue simple and easy. It eliminates the heretofore almost insuperable difficulties of the matter of interest calculations and payments on time deposits—as to calculations, by making them automatic; as to payments, by furnishing a coupon to represent the interest, which is paid like an ordinary check, and which furnishes both a record and a voucher for the interest payments, thus preventing both errors and dishonesty among employees. It furnishes the most simple and concise method of keeping the records ever devised, by which the labor involved in taking care of a large volume of business is reduced to the minimum and made absolutely simple, thus saving the bank in labor and expense. It is perfectly elastic, both as to form and as to use, and so can be made to meet any needs or conditions that may arise in the conduct of the time-deposit business, and promises to prove a boon to the depositor and to the bank.

I have thus gone somewhat into detail in giving a general account of this device in its development and its more general application so that you may understand more fully its nature and be able to judge more intelligently as to the probable effects of its use in carrying out the provisions of the bill now under consideration.

The matter is of such vital importance that it should command our most careful investigation in the light of all the information available.

In my opinion it furnishes an adequate means for prompt and substantial relief along financial lines. That there is both a need and a demand for such relief no one will deny. The country has just passed through the most startling financial crisis in its history, resulting in panic and ruin and in widespread business depression, from which we are recovering very slowly, and with the possibility of a repetition of similar conditions constantly hanging over us.

If the Government will adopt this plan, so simple in all its details, so inexpensive in its establishment and maintenance, and so full of possibility for good, it will furnish the people with a convenient and attractive means of saving, will add millions to the wealth of the Nation, will make provision for the possible solution of many of our financial problems, and the correction of our monetary ills, and will prevent the frequent recurrence of panics and costly financial upheavals similar to the one through which we have so recently passed, with all their attendant and consequent evils.

The country is looking to this Congress for some form of relief. They have waited long and patiently for some favorable action. Every consideration of self-interest as well as of patriotism demands it. If not moved by any loftier motive, we dare not go before the people again without having heeded their call.

Let not the party leaders deceive themselves into inactivity with the comfortable thought that when the time comes the people can be whipped or cajoled into submission. The people have called long and loudly for relief.

The country is ripe to-day for the establishment of postal savings banks, and this is being urged both by the President and by the Postmaster-General. If we ignore this opportunity and allow it to pass without action, the people will have their day of reckoning.

I offer you here, ready to hand, the means of meeting the demands of the people in a most simple and effective manner. The establishment of postal savings banks, employing the postal savings certificate, would furnish a large measure of immediate relief and would, I believe, in its working out, in a large measure, obviate the necessity for further or other financial legislation.

The bringing out of hiding hoarded millions of the people's savings and putting them into the channels of legitimate trade, with the possibility in times of financial stress of practically doubling this amount in circulation by the use of the postal savings certificate as currency, is certainly big with the possibilities of financial good. And all this is possible and the means at hand for its accomplishment without disturbing any vested interests, without antagonizing anyone's pet schemes, and without arousing the resentment or antagonism which almost any other financial plan would encounter.

Herein lies a very hopeful feature of this bill. All the other financial plans proposed run counter to so many interests, and so provoke such violent opposition, that, whether good or bad, there appears no hope of their passage. The financial interests, meanwhile, are left in jeopardy, and the storm of public wrath gathers black and ominous, ready to break upon our heads.

Now to sum up: The postal savings depositories employing the postal savings certificate could be put into actual operation in the course of a few weeks with the greatest ease and facility. It requires no red tape, would necessitate very little expense more than the engraving of the certificates, and is so simple in its operations that it would not require any previous preparation or training on the part of the postmaster, even a child being able to do the work.

It furnishes the people a most convenient and attractive means of accumulating their savings, and, moreover, one in which they have absolute confidence, and of realizing an income therefrom in the meantime.

It furnishes every safeguard to the Government. As between the Government and the post-office of issue there is an absolute check.

The certificates themselves have every known safeguard, and as interest is paid only upon the presentation of matured interest coupons, which can easily and quickly be checked up, and which furnish both a record and a voucher for the payment, there is no opportunity for error or fraud.

The necessary bookkeeping is so simple, and the amount required so small, that it would result in a very large saving to the Government, over any other plan proposed, besides giving more complete and satisfactory results. By a very simple entry the Government would be able to determine exactly the amount of interest for which it is, or is to become, liable, on certificates outstanding, which result would not be possible by any other system proposed.

It would also, as a most important collateral result, furnish an elastic emergency circulation, which feature might be further emphasized, and rendered automatic, should it be deemed wise to authorize the Postmaster-General, by and with the advice and consent of the President, and the Secretary of the Treasury, or otherwise, as might be prescribed by law, in times of financial stress, to remove the limit to the amount that may be deposited. And, further, to allow the banks themselves to deposit with the post-offices, on demand, with or without interest, receiving the money back on deposit, properly secured, and a like amount of emergency circulation, in the form of postal savings certificates of small denomination, to be called in at the pleasure of the Government.

This emergency circulation might easily be increased to any desired extent by providing that the banks taking out these certificates might employ them as a basis for circulation. That is, they might deposit these bonds with the Government and issue their own circulation against them, as is now regularly done. For this purpose, it would be more convenient to issue these certificates or bonds in larger denominations prepared for the purpose.

Thus, in emergency, the volume of circulation might be practically doubled in the briefest time. And this without any additional machinery, and without doing violence to existing conditions. Moreover, the volume of this emergency circulation might be readily controlled by the simple process of raising or lowering the rate of interest to be paid by the banks on Government deposits. This would furnish an emergency circulation, automatically elastic, and based upon the best of all foundations, the people's savings, backed by the Government. This, however, is not provided for in the present bill, and is merely dropped as a suggestion that may be worth considering.

I advocate a postal savings bank system, on principle, believing it to have in it the possibilities of the greatest good to the greatest number of our people.

I advocate the use of the certificate of deposit in the conduct of such a system because I believe it is more simple and inexpensive, and that it will more perfectly meet the conditions and accomplish the ends in view.

I advocate particularly this form of postal savings certificate because of its flexibility and its possibilities of adaptation to every condition and to every need, its availability for the accomplishment of the most desirable results along financial lines.

I have investigated the subject with care, and as far as my information goes I find nothing which in my judgment even approaches this instrument in its possibilities for usefulness. It will bear investigation, and I ask that you inform yourselves in regard to it; that you study it with open minds, and I am willing to abide by your honest conclusions.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. GRONNA. Would the gentleman have any objection to including state banks? I see from his bill that it would be impossible for any state bank to receive any of these deposits.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. In answer to the gentleman I will say that only a few moments ago that question was asked me by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES]. I see no objection to it, but if a state bank should want to take advantage of this measure it would be necessary that it submit to an examination by a government expert, so that its assets might be clearly shown and the Government know it would be safe to loan a certain amount of money to it.

Mr. GRONNA. The reason I asked the question is this: In nearly all new countries the banker prefers to operate under the state laws, because, as a matter of fact, no loans can be made on real estate by national banks. That is one of the reasons why bankers prefer to operate under the state laws. Another question I would like to ask the gentleman is this: If we enact a law of this kind, do not you believe we should say where and how this money should be deposited, and not leave it to the discretion of the Postmaster-General? For instance, we will say in a State like mine, North Dakota, that the Postmaster-General shall designate the places where this money shall be deposited, and let us say that he designates a certain bank in the city of Fargo or in the city of Grand Forks. Only a limited amount of that deposit can be placed in an institution where, as a matter of fact, hundreds and thousands of dollars are being deposited by the citizens of that State, but they are being deprived of getting these deposits because the Postmaster-General has the power to designate the banks that shall be national depositories.

I do not care to make a speech in the gentleman's time, but I want to say this, that there is one of the essential points—that the money should be deposited and remain in the locality where it is being deposited. Money is the lifeblood of this Nation, of any commercial nation, and it should absolutely remain in the community where it is being deposited. I believe that if we pass a law of this kind we should limit the amount that could be placed with any bank in any particular community.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. I was just going to suggest to the gentleman that he should ask for some time, as I would like to see that brought out. I believe there is no provision for loaning money to state banks in any of the bills, but I suggest that might be a good amendment. I also say that the provision in the bills that the money shall be loaned to the banks near at hand does not prevent the Postmaster-General from loaning it to other banks if those banks near at hand could not use it.

Mr. GRONNA. No; but it is in his discretion whether he wants to do it or not.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Well, the responsibility and the administrative features must be left to somebody.

Mr. GRONNA. Is it not true under our present system of banking that where certain banks have asked for government deposits they have been refused, and one of the reasons that has been advanced is that they did not care to open any more accounts?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. This would open accounts with all national banks under the provision. That is understood.

Mr. HAUGEN. All banks that have been designated as depositories.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. They might all be, under these circumstances.

Mr. HAUGEN. They are not at the present time.

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. No.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. Yes.

Mr. GILLESPIE. Is not the difficulty suggested by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA], who just took his seat, one that we can not well get over in this country? In foreign countries, as I understand it, where they have this system, they are not using the postal bank to borrow money for national banks or any other banks from the people. They take the postal-bank receipts and invest them in government securities. It is a device used by those governments for borrowing money from the people. The difficulty here is that we do not want to use this system for that purpose. This plan undertakes to spread the wings of the Government over certain classes of people and to say that we want to provide a safe place for them to put their money and that we will pay them interest upon it. One of the difficulties is, what are we going to do with the money when we get it? Are you going to pick out favorites and say, "You shall have this money?" Is not that an insuperable difficulty in the way of that system in this country as compared with foreign countries, because the purpose for which they use it is not applicable, for we do not want to use it for that purpose here. The question is, Shall the power of the Government be extended to taking care of the people's money and paying them interest on it and then lend this money to favorites?

Mr. BURTON of Delaware. That is a matter of detail which, of course, has to be worked out. I do not think anything could be made perfect along that line, but there is no question that a postal savings system is urgently demanded in this country, and if the Government could do nothing better with the money, it had better use it for current expenses than to leave it hidden away under carpets, outside of all the channels of trade. However, that is a matter of detail that I do not feel able to provide for or to give a solution of, as the gentleman's question indicates.

I am not wedded to this device, and advocate its use only on the grounds of its merits, which have become apparent to me through careful investigation. If anyone has a better plan to propose, I am with him heartily. What we want is a postal savings system, conducted in the manner best adapted to secure the ends in view, and to bring the largest measure of good to all the people. I challenge your support of this plan or the production of a better. In the absence of any better plan, let us sink out of sight our personal pride or preference or interests or prejudices and get together upon this simple, inexpensive, and perfectly feasible plan, which furnishes apparently the only solution of our financial difficulties possible at this time, and which will bring peace and calm to the troubled sea of finance, confidence to the business interests of the country, larger prosperity to the great saving class, which forms, indeed, the bone and sinew of our prosperity, to us the gratitude of a great people and the satisfaction of approving consciences, and to posterity, the inestimable blessing of a stable and well-ordered financial system which shall keep pace with our onward progress in social, intellectual, and moral development, toward a glorious destiny, in which we shall bless humanity, and honor God in the advancement of His purpose.

Mr. Chairman, in addition to what I have said I want to call the attention of the House and of the country to the fact that during the past summer the two great political parties of this Nation, in conventions assembled, made certain promises in their platform declarations to the people of this country. Among others was the establishment of a postal savings bank system. They went before the people upon the promises made in their platforms. Because of the greater confidence of the people of this land in the Republican party and greater confidence in its nominee, its lease of power was renewed for four years, beginning on the 4th of March next. Can that great party expect to live longer than that four years if it fails to fulfill its pledge that it has made to the people, as far as it is possible to do so? I do not believe it can, and on the shoulders of the Republican party of this Nation rests this great proposition. I hope and trust that it may be equal to the occasion and will fulfill every pledge; and then that party to which this Nation owes so much of its prosperity, its general good, and its general uplift may be allowed to control its destinies for a longer period of time. [Loud applause.]

But unless it keeps faith with the people who have trusted it so completely, they will ask that it surrender its stewardship to some other. Realizing what it has done in the past; knowing that it has had the intelligence, the patriotism, and the courage to meet every past emergency, I confidently trust it to deal with this problem now.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report progress.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUTLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26203, the pension appropriation bill, and had directed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, Mr. ANTHONY was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Luke Morrissey (H. R. 8298, Fifty-seventh Congress), no adverse report having been made thereon.

EULOGIES.

Mr. GUERNSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following order, and ask that it be read and considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the following order, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Order No. 15.

Ordered, That there be a session of the House at 12 o'clock m., Sunday, January 31, for the delivery of eulogies on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. LLEWELLYN POWERS, late a Member of this House from Maine.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the order is agreed to.

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 26399) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, which was read the first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that I will call this bill up on Monday.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to understand if it is to be called up just after the morning hour.

Mr. TAWNEY. At the conclusion of the consideration of the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then, we will go on with the pension bill Monday?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, Mr. NICHOLLS was granted leave of absence for two weeks on account of important business.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 7639. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appraise certain lands in the State of Minnesota, for the purpose of granting the same to the Minnesota and Manitoba Railroad Company for a ballast pit—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 7764. An act for the relief of J. Randolph Peyton—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UNITED STATES COURTS, TENNESSEE.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 25405) to change and fix the time for holding the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee.

Be it enacted, etc., That the terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the northeastern division of the eastern district of Tennessee, held at Greeneville, shall commence on the last Mondays in March and September of each year instead of the first Mondays in June and November, as now provided by law; that the terms of said courts for the middle district of Tennessee, held at Nashville, shall commence on the second Mondays in April and October of each year instead of the first Mondays in April and October, as now provided by law; that the terms of said courts for the southern division of the eastern district of Tennessee, held at Chattanooga, shall commence on the fourth Mondays in May and November of each year instead of the first Mondays in May and December, as now provided by law; and that the terms of said courts for the northern division of the eastern district of Tennessee, held at Knoxville, shall commence on the first Mondays in July and January of each year instead of the first Monday in March and second Monday in September, as now provided by law.

SEC. 2. That no action, suit, proceeding, information, indictment, recognizance, bail bond, or other process in any of said courts shall abate or be rendered invalid by reason of the change of time in the holding of the terms of said courts, but the same shall be deemed to be returnable to, pending, and triable at the terms herein provided for.

SEC. 3. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and are hereby, repealed.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect from and after February 1, 1909, the public welfare requiring it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know how far this changes existing law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It just changes the time of holding court in the middle and eastern districts of Tennessee. Court is held at Nashville, Chattanooga, and Knoxville.

Mr. KEIFER. Does it fix any new places for holding court?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No. It does not name any new places, but changes the time of holding the court for the convenience of the judges—Judge Lurton and Judge Sanford.

Mr. KEIFER. Did the committee report it?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; a unanimous report. Judge Sanford wrote to the delegation, and here is a letter in the report, Mr. Speaker, dated "Judges' Chambers, United States District Court, Chattanooga, Tenn., January 4, 1909," to Mr. Brownlow, and I received one of the same kind. In that letter he not only sends the bill and asks that it be made law, but he states:

I have written Judge Lurton in reference to the proposed bill, and he writes that it meets his "most hearty indorsement," and that he hopes it will soon be enacted into law.

Mr. KEIFER. I have no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD the letter of Judge Sanford to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNLOW].

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

JUDGES' CHAMBERS,
UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
Chattanooga, Tenn., January 4, 1909.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose you draft of a bill which I have prepared for the purpose of changing the terms of the federal courts in the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee, the enactment of which would, I believe, greatly facilitate the due and orderly dispatch of the work of these courts.

Under the present arrangement the first spring term commences in Knoxville on the first Monday in March and the last at Greeneville on the first Monday in June, with both the Chattanooga and Nashville terms between; while the first fall term commences at Knoxville on the second Monday in September and the last at Chattanooga on the first Monday in December, with both the Nashville and Greeneville terms between. This puts all of the spring terms practically in the three months of March, April, and May and the early part of June, and all of the fall terms practically in the four months of September, October, November, and December, leaving no term whatever in the midwinter months of January and February, or in July, August, and the greater part of June in the summer.

There are several serious disadvantages under the present arrangement.

First. The different terms are so crowded together in the fall and spring that it is very difficult to complete, after each regular term is held and before taking up the next term elsewhere, the large amount of chamber work which accumulates at each term and to decide the equity cases that are heard and the motions for new trials that are made, it being, however, very desirable that there should be sufficient time between the courts to permit all of the matters relating to each term at any given place to be disposed of before the next term is taken up at another place, so that they can be promptly decided while clear in the memory and not postponed, as they must otherwise frequently be, until after the end of the terms held elsewhere.

Second. The fall term at Knoxville is especially inconvenient, being held in September, which is the hottest and, I think, the most trying month of the year in this section, and also commencing on the same date that the supreme court begins its sessions there, thus making it very inconvenient for the attorneys, who are just returning from their vacations and have considerable office work on hand, as well as the preparation of cases for hearing in the supreme court.

Third. The intervals between the different terms of court at the same places are not always equally divided into two periods of six months, there being both at Chattanooga and at Greeneville periods of five and seven months between the two terms. This is undesirable in all cases, and in the longer interval may work great hardship to a defendant bound over to a court on a criminal charge and unable to give bond.

Under the proposed bill the fall terms would commence at Greeneville on the last Monday in September, after the excessive summer heat has passed and the summer vacation ended, and the actual court work would continue at the different places until the end of the January term at Chattanooga, while the spring terms would commence on the last Monday in March at Greeneville and continue until the end of the July term at Knoxville, ending usually before the heat of August and September. The terms at Knoxville would be practically restored, as you will note, to the times at which they were formerly held before being changed by the act of February 27, 1896, chapter 35, the only difference being that before that date they commenced on the second Mondays in January and July instead of the first, as now proposed (R. S., 572, 658).

There would be a period of two weeks for the Greeneville term, six weeks for the middle district term at Nashville, and five weeks for the Chattanooga term, which would, I believe, give sufficient time at each place not merely for holding the court but also, ordinarily, for the disposition of all motions for new trials and the decision of equity causes and other matters taken under advisement before commencing the term at the next place. There would, furthermore, be equal intervals of six months between the successive terms at all places.

I am very sure that if the desired change is made I should be able in holding the courts to keep up with the work of the two districts much more promptly than I am able to do under the present arrangement.

I have written to Judge Lurton in reference to the proposed bill, and he writes that it meets his "most hearty indorsement," and that he hopes it will soon be enacted into law.

Believing that the passage of the proposed bill would be to the public interest, I should on that account, if it commends itself to your judgment, be glad if you could give it the benefit of your suport and influence.

Very truly, yours, EDWARD T. SANFORD,
District Judge.

Hon. W. P. BROWNLOW, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

WILLIAM JONDRON.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a bill of the following title, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2712) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and cancel the allotment of William Jondron, Yankton Sioux allottee, should it prove to be fictitious.

The SPEAKER. It seems that this bill passed yesterday. Examination shows that on May 28 last, I believe, the bill in substance was enacted into law with other bills. Without objection, the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered and the bill laid on the table.

There was no objection.

ANNIE WARD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the bill of the following title, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 558) to authorize a patent to be issued to Annie Ward, formerly Annie Brown, for certain lands therein described.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in the same condition as the one just referred to. As a motion to reconsider was made, and that motion laid upon the table, without objection the motion to reconsider will be taken from the table and the vote by which the bill was passed will be reconsidered and the bill lie on the table.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, is the author of the bill willing that this should be done?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the bill was introduced by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. The Chair has not been informed by that gentleman. The provisions of the bill were enacted at the last session of Congress.

Mr. ADAIR. The only question I was making was whether the author of the bill was present and knew what was being done with relation to his bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from North Dakota was notified yesterday of the condition referred to.

Mr. ADAIR. Well, I have no objection, then.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of rents received from the property purchased for a hall of records (H. Doc. No. 1332)—to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a reply to the inquiry of the House as to detail of retired officers of the army for certain services (H. Doc. No. 1331)—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 26216) to extend the provisions of section 4 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, to the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1863), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3764) to apply a portion of the proceeds of the sales of public lands to the endowment of schools or departments of mines and mining, and to regulate the expenditure thereof, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1867), which
